

Professor Stanley Shenk

With the editorial that appears below, we introduce the practice of asking one of the teaching or administrative faculty to be a guest editor of the Bulletin. This month's guest editor is Dr. Stanley Shenk, professor of Bible.

Professor Shenk is exceptionally well qualified to edit this issue of the Bulletin, which focuses on the Middle East. Last year — from May 20 to June 11, 1977 — he led his sixth tour to the Middle East, teaching his third Goshen College Bible course abroad. He spent the summer of 1972 studying at Hebrew University and working on the Tel Qasile archaeological project in Israel. He also conducted a research project on the Coptic churches of Egypt in the summer and fall of 1975, and served as a volunteer in the excavation at Tel Dan in Israel in the summer of 1976.

THE MIDDLE EAST: A focal point of interest

On television and in magazines, the scenes appear again and again: the stones and skyline of Jerusalem; the Nile from a hotel balcony in Cairo; special planes landing and taking off at Tel Aviv, Amman, Cairo, and Damascus; ancient irrigation wheels in Egypt; kibbutz tractors in Israel; archaeologists probing in their earthen squares; the level, direct gaze of Palestinian children; worshippers praying in mosques, churches, and at the Wall; the faces of Sadat, Begin, Assad, and King Hussein.

We look and watch—week after week, month after month. And most of the world watches with us. Recently I asked myself, "What are the factors which focus interest so intently on the Middle East?" I think there are at least seven.

It is a focal point of Jewish, Christian, and Muslim emotions. Here Abraham journeyed, and David ruled, and Solomon built; and here, according to Jewish belief, on the Temple Mount is the great rock where Abraham was ready to offer Isaac—and nearby is the Wailing, or Western, Wall with its massive stones from Herod's western retaining wall for the enlarged platform of the Second Temple.

Here, according to the Gospels, Jesus was born in Bethlehem, and died and rose again in Jerusalem; and here are the shrine-churches of The Nativity and The Holy Sepulchre.

Here, according to Muslim belief, is the great rock where Abraham was ready to offer Ishmael, and from which Muhammed ascended to heaven; and here is the splendid edifice, The Dome of the Rock.

Jews and Muslims venerate the Rock; Jews sway in prayer at the Wall; and Christians bow in prayer at the Manger Grotto and the Empty Tomb. These four sites are emotional foci for hundreds of millions of the adherents of the world's three monotheistic religions.

Border-crossings —

"Israelis are our cousins, and we want to get along with them but they are always causing trouble. Anywhere the Israelis go," the Jordanian said, "they make trouble."

Mary Arslan heard these words last summer during Goshen College's Middle East Bible Seminar. Taught by Professor Stanley Shenk, the three-week course included people of various age groups, from a high-school senior to a sixty-seven-year-old. Mary Arslan, Laura Doty and Jim Brenneman were among the ten Goshen students who participated in this trip to Jordan and Israel.

As she described the seminar, Mary said, "It was like going on a road through the Bible." The group saw women along the roadside gleaning grain and shepherds near Bethlehem watching their sheep. They saw the place where David slew Goliath and where Jesus fed the 5,000.

But the "road through the Bible" did have some "border-crossings," times when tension between Jews and Arabs intruded upon the ancient landscape, bringing the traveler, in Jim's words, "back to the modern day."

Laura said that in Jordan she first became aware of this tension when the group was advised not to talk about Israel, not even to mention the name. "We didn't want to anger any people," Laura said, "so we played a little game. Instead of talking about 'Israel,' we talked about 'Disneyland.'" Once the group reached "Disneyland," Jordan became McDonald's."

While in Jordan, the students were also careful never to order a coke. "Because the Coke Company went to Israel first," Laura explained, "Jordan doesn't want anything to do with it. Jordanians drink Pepsi-Cola instead."

Tension took a more tangible form at a border-crossing (a literal one) between Jordan and Israel, where armed Israeli guards inspected the group's possessions for two hours. "Because we were coming from Jordan, they didn't trust us," Mary said. "They x-rayed our shoes and luggage. They even made us take pictures with our cameras pointed at the ceiling to make sure they weren't guns."

But the longer they stayed in the Middle East, Jim said, the more he came to understand the distrust between the Arabs and Jews and the complexity of their fears. He said he found it impossible to "take sides"—for although the Arabs have been pushed from their homeland, so have the Jews. For Jim, the Arab refugee camps on the West Bank and the memorial of Yad Vashem, honoring the six million Jews who were executed in World War II, stand as symbols of the tragic history of both peoples.

A difference in cultures, Laura believes, also contributes to the feelings of tension between Arabs and Jews. She discovered that the Arabs in Jordan are very conscious of their manners. If two Arab businessmen meet for a discussion, they will first go through a long ceremony of questions: "How has your day been?" "How is your wife?" "How are your children?" "After the important questions have been asked," Laura grinned, "they'll sneak in the business and then get back to the pleasantries." On the other hand, she feels that Jews are much more "direct in their transactions."

The group's Jordanian and Israeli tour guides, Laura said, exemplified this difference between cultures. In an introductory speech, the Arab guide gave the group "the red carpet," going "on and on in flowery speech" about how glad he was to lead such a "fine group." The Israeli guide, meeting the group for the first time, was more abrupt. He simply stated, "This is it. Let's go."

Laura believes that this difference between cultures is the "root of a lot of bitterness." She said, "It bothers the Jews that the Jordanians are so hung up on ritual that they won't even talk with Israel." The Arabs believe that negotiation would be an act of acknowledgement and thus a sign of Jordanian acceptance of the Israeli state.

Religion is another cause of animosity between the Jews and Arabs. Laura said that both Moslems and Jews consider certain traditional sites "holy" and often these areas are causes of conflict. A little more than ten years ago, when the Arabs occupied the Old City of Jerusalem, the Jews were not allowed to worship at the Wailing Wall and other holy places. Now that the Jews control all parts of the city, they grant local Muslims and Muslim visitors the right to worship freely. But the Jews have not forgotten "past injustices" and they are still bitter.

A symbol of those injustices, Laura said, was "a real sore point among the Jews" is the hotel that was built prior to 1967 on the Mount of Olives, a holy site for the Jews. A Jewish graveyard stood on the Mount, and it is said that the Jordanians used some of its stones to build the hotel. Laura said that the Jews view the hotel as an outright desecration.

Then, too, many Muslims and Jews believe that only they have the "true faith" and that those

Sadat changes the Middle East equation

Bertha Wenger '53 Swarr has lived in Israel since 1957. Recently she has served as part of the pastoral and counseling team of Immanuel House, an international Christian congregation in Jaffa.

Martha Yoder '77 spent nine months as a technical associate at Nazareth Hospital in 1976 under MBM. She is now a medical student at Indiana University.

Linda Nolt '69 and David Helms are teaching at Ramses College for Girls in Cairo, in addition to serving as Mennonite Central Committee country representatives for Egypt. Prior to beginning this assignment in the summer of 1977, they both taught at the Delaware County Christian School at Newton Square, PA.

The Middle East is never far from the headlines. During the past 30 years the incessant clash of Israelis and Arabs has escalated into armed conflict in 1948, 1956, 1967, and 1973. If any conflict situation in the world looked hopeless, it was the one in the Middle East: nowhere else have the claims of both sides carried such burdens of history, religious conviction and experience of injustice. Each succeeding war has heightened the complexities rather than broadening the possibilities of peacemaking.

But history is the story of change. The year 1977 may well turn out to have been the year when the "psychological barrier," to use Egyptian President Sadat's terminology, was broken by the enormous longings for peace in the area. The visit of the Egyptian President to Israel November 19-21 was so dramatic that it overshadows the other important initiatives for peace begun earlier by President Carter and the election of a new Prime Minister in Israel May 17. Although at this writing the hard diplomatic bargaining is only beginning, enough has happened to set in motion forces which should provide at least a separate peace between Israel and Egypt and at most form the basis for a broader regional settlement. Not of least significance, Sadat reminds us again of the integral role of personality and imagination in determining the course of history.

"Peace is a Rewriting of History"

Arab statesmen have long been known for their oratory. Anyone who watched President Sadat address the Israeli Knesset, or Parliament, saw a typical performance. Rich in feeling and didactic in style, Sadat spoke of his personal longings for peace and justice and appealed for new ways of thinking. After reciting the failures of the past decades, Sadat suggested that peace will not come from signing a treaty but rather "a rewriting of history."

Perhaps no other phrase captures the significance of Sadat's imaginative search for peace. By going to Jerusalem, Anwar el Sadat demonstrated that the Arab refusal to recognize the existence of Israel had ended. Since 1948 the Arab states had used every possible means of avoiding intercourse with the Israeli nation and people. Through such a "nonrecognition policy," Arab political leaders expressed their hope that Israel would disintegrate - go away.

Peace: Comprehensive or Separate

The code words to watch as the dialogue unfolds between Egypt and Israel are "comprehensive" and "separate." Since 1948 the Arab position has been to express desire for a comprehensive settlement. Since 1967 this has meant a return to pre-1967 borders, with Israel giving up the occupied territories — the Golan Heights taken from Syria, the West Bank taken from Jordan and the Sinai taken from Egypt. The most critical area is the West Bank which has now become the area Palestinians want as their own homeland.

Israel at the same time has held out for "defensible" borders, diplomatic recognition by the Arabs and a reduction of the Arab military threat. Israel has preferred to make peace in a step-by-step way, one nation at a time. Egypt has been the biggest Arab nation with whom they had essential differences. Israel has always hoped to make peace in the Sinai first. Thinking Syria the most intransigent, Israel was prepared to wait for a propitious moment and perhaps a less hostile government there.

Two developments have upset these calculations during the past decade. First has been the growing national consciousness of the Palestinians. Ironically, there are now about as many people who claim to be Palestinians scattered throughout the area as there are Israeli Jews. About a million Palestinians live in the West Bank and Gaza strip. Some 400,000 live in Israel proper. Another million live in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria. Palestinians in Israel or the occupied territories are not well organized, apart from traditional village elders. Palestinians in the diaspora are well organized. The major spokesman for the PLO — Palestine Liberation Organization — now is Yasser Arafat. The PLO calls for a return to the homeland where Palestinians might live in a secular state alongside their Semitic Jewish cousins. More recently the PLO has been working for a west bank state, which Israel fears as a potential political rival within Palestine itself.

A second development has been the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories. Seventy-seven have been created and count over 8,000 settlers. Most of these settlements have been made by Orthodox Jews called the Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful) who believe Israel is destined to have borders comparable to that of the ancient Davidic Kingdom. As an Orthodox believer, Prime Minister Begin has supported the Gush Emunim both before and since his accession to power.

What this means is that a comprehensive peace settlement will involve more than border adjustments. It also means that a separate peace will at most be an expanded truce. If Sadat needed to take the leap to "rewrite history" in order to recognize Israel and break the psychological trap, Begin must also now "rewrite history" in order to deal with the Palestinians. This will involve handing the "Orthodox subculture" of Israel which defied both governmental and international opinion by moving into the Arab territories.

Peace: Politics — Economic Perspective

Now, however, Israel is the most prosperous and militarily powerful nation in the area apart from the oil-rich states of the Arabian peninsula. Israel's military power is built on the premise that it can destroy invading armies on one front and hold the other front until it can move troops and material from the first to the second for a knock-out blow. Last year, 1977, Israel's gross national product of over $10 billion passed Egypt, a neighbor with over 12 times as many people. Israel's GNP per capita of nearly $3,000 far outshadows Egypt's $250.

Second only to the recognition of Israel has been Mr. Sadat's willingness to risk dividing the Arab bloc nations. The Arabs have not been politically united since the Middle Ages. What binds them together? Religion, language, culture and a common enemy — Israel. Sadat's trip without the support of other Arab league members has divided the Arabs into three groups. Egypt is alone in the forefront of a search for peace. Opposite Egypt are the "rejectionist" states which oppose any recognition of Israel. These states — Libya, Algeria, Iraq, Southern Yemen, and Syria — first met at Tripoli early in December to organize their opposition to Sadat's initiative. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) is equally intransigent. Between these two polarities are Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, and Tunisia. The Saudis, whose economic aid to Egypt is absolutely imperative, have apparently supported Sadat. Jordan is weak militarily and is waiting to see how far they can join the peace conferees without antagonizing neighboring Syria and Iraq. Even though Syria has identified with the rejectionists, her President Assad has been careful to keep open the possibility of later joining in a peace conference.

Next to total peace and security, Israel's diplomatic aim has been to get peace on at least one border if not all. It now appears that such a possibility is at hand in a treaty with Egypt which will eliminate the largest and best Arab army from the conflict.

Elaine Miller '64 and Joe Haines '63 with Arab friends

Nazareth Hospital, with Nazareth in the background.

Goshen Alums Call Nazareth Their Home

"It's terribly exciting to see the steps that have been taken recently toward peace in the Middle East," Joe '63 and Elaine Miller '64 Haines have lived most of the past ten years in Israel. Their eyes light with deeply felt emotion as they comment on recent events in that area.

Is there reason for optimism? "We dare not be pessimistic," Elaine says. "Now that the unthinkable has happened — an Egyptian leader has visited Israel — the way is open for further steps toward peace. This is the time for Christian, Jew and Muslim to unite in prayers for peace."

Observing events in the Middle East from their furlough home in Goshen, Joe and Elaine feel the drama of these events in very human terms. In Nazareth, their home for the past five years, Jew and Arab live side by side. With close friends in both communities, the Haineses have felt the pain of the history and the present situation of both groups.

Living in Israel, one is reminded of the complex history behind today's events, including the part that Christians have played. "Standing beside someone in a museum, you suddenly notice the concentration camp number tattooed on his arm. Or you visit the memorial to the Holocaust, and feel sickened at the depravity of man. The Arabs remember the crusades; the Jews remember the Inquisition and forced 'conversions.' We live with a sense of repentance for that history."

Israel is such a small country that everyone has been close to the wars of recent history. Young men and women with war injuries are a constant reminder of the conflict. "People there seem to live every day with life-and-death issues. It makes some of our concerns here in North America seem superficial." Since the Yom Kippur War of 1973, an annual inflation rate of 35 to 40 percent has caused much suffering.

Joe and Elaine describe the purpose of their presence in Israel as "reconciliation . . . but that's hard to describe, it's on a one-to-one basis, low-key." Joe is chaplain at the Nazareth Hospital, an interdenominational institution run by the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. Elaine has occasionally taught in the nursing school of the hospital. They presently work under the Mennonite Board of Missions. Earlier assignments, at other locations in Israel, were under the Mennonite Central Committee.

Because the Mennonites in Israel have chosen not to establish Mennonite churches, the mission personnel are free of some of the western missionary image, and thus apparently are more approachable. For example, an Arab Anglican congregation felt free to ask Joe to serve as their pastor for an interim period. In small Bible study groups, Joe and Elaine found Arab Christians seeking growth and fellowship which their ancient churches, regrettably, do not provide. The Haineses also supervised a small bookstore which offered Christian literature in Arabic.

Joe has a unique ministry to Arab Christian prisoners; he is the only person who has been granted permission to visit them in a pastoral role. Some of these political prisoners are serving life sentences and have little other contact with the outside world.

During this school year, Joe is a student at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart. He and Elaine, with their three children, will return to their home in Nazareth in August.

It is where Biblical history and physical geography meet. Both the ancient Hebrews and the early Christians believed that God acted in history. They recounted "the saving deeds of the Lord" as Samuel did (in I Samuel 12:7) and as Paul did (at Antioch in Pisidia in Acts 13). Middle Eastern geography, and Palestinian geography in particular, is where the deeds of the Lord took place. Because both Hebrews and Christians were history-conscious, they tended to remember through the centuries where things happened. This is why we can go to Hazor and the Spring of Harod and Jacob's Well—and know that we are going to the Hazor of Joshua, and the Harod of Gideon, and the Jacob's Well of John 4. The locations, of course, of many Biblical events and places have been lost, and some that are pointed out today are merely "the traditional sites," but the three mentioned above, and many others, are certain.

George Adam Smith has said that there is no land except Palestine which has been "so swept by the great forces of history." One can sit on the Mount of Olives, look down on Jerusalem, and muse for hours on the prophets, priests, and kings who have played their parts on the stage below.

It is a major locale of continuing archaeological research. Again this summer, expeditions will go out to Lachish, Dan, Tell Halif (possibly the Biblical Ziklag), Timnah, Caesarea, and many other locations. Volunteers will swarm to Israel from colleges, seminaries, universities, the divorce courts, the ranks of the clergy, and rabbinical schools. The diggers will seek history, "roots," broken pots, crumbling walls, romance, faith, and adventure.

It is the contemporary center of world Jewry. Most Israeli Jews are not strongly committed to the serious practice of conventional Judaism. But the modern entity of Israel has become the cultural center for many, if not most, of the 14½ million who make up the present world Jewish population. Dispersed over the centuries and millennia into almost all the nations of the world, the Jews have now found a national homeland. This, of course, has produced tragedy for over two million Palestinians who also rightfully consider Palestine as their homeland. But over one-fifth of the Jews in the world are now in Israel. This is a demographic and political fact. And in spite of its huge burden of defense spending, Israel is achieving economic viability.

Here in Israel are the kibbutzim (over 250 of them), with their emphases of communal sharing, vigorous patriotism, hard work, economic success, and participation at high levels in the armed forces and the government.

Here, too, is the main room of the Holocaust memorial at Yad Vashem, with its gas flame, its shadows, and its six million tiny stones embedded in the floor. Here, amid the terrible memories it enshrines, one can understand the Jewish passion of the late 1940's for a place of refuge—a passion that finally, for better or for worse, produced the modern State of Israel.

It is the stage of a dramatic conflict between the Jews and the Arabs, both of whom carry the glory and the burden of special historical backgrounds and religious convictions. The clash between the Zionists (those unique nationalists who wanted an independent country but who first had to transport themselves to that country) and the Palestinians did not involve a sinister and wicked plot by either. The European Zionists were naive. They scarcely considered at first that far-away Palestine had a people of its own. Upon discovering this disturbing fact, they went ahead with the wistful hope that the prior inhabitants would welcome an expanding Jewish Community in the land on the basis of the greater prosperity it would generate for all. But if the Zionists were naive, the Palestinians were notably incapable of the type of accommodation that might have left adequate room for both peoples in the land. No, neither group conceived a diabolical plot against the other. Rather, it was a case of two valid nationalisms (if, in fact, such a thing as a valid nationalism exists) coming into seemingly inevitable conflict over the same piece of land. To borrow a phrase from U.S. Civil War history, it was an "irrepressible conflict." And when the Jewish-Arab War of 1948 broke out, one side almost inevitably had to lose. And that was the tragedy. Perhaps today (but only perhaps), at the turn of a new year, in what may be the dawn of a new era in the Middle East, room may yet be found west of the Jordan River for both peoples to live together in self-respect and peace.

It is an arena of human suffering. The Palestinians, in particular, have suffered heavily—in self-esteem, loss of homes and possessions, and in many cases, in loss of hope. Charitable organizations, including our own Mennonite Central Committee, have tried to meet elemental needs and to help people prepare for new vocational possibilities. But Israelis have also suffered from the ceaseless turmoil. Both in the spring of 1967 and in the opening days of the 1973 Yom Kippur War a very real fear swept Israel from end to end. An MCC worker in Jerusalem in 1973, whose main task had been to assist Palestinians, sought out Jewish acquaintances on that occasion in order to strengthen lines of communication and friendship with them. "These people were suffering too," he said later.

It is a possible tinder-box for a third World War. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are deeply involved in the Middle East. It is all too easy to imagine a variety of scenarios for a Middle Eastern crisis which could escalate into a nuclear exchange between the two superpowers.

For all these reasons, and more, we continue to watch the Middle East. We are fascinated, concerned, fearful.

Goshen College, like many other educational institutions, is involved in the Middle East. Alumni are serving and have served there. Dennis MacDonald has had kibbutz experience in Israel and has studied Modern Hebrew there. Dean Lapp will be serving the MCC in Jerusalem next year as a consultant. Once every two years the college sponsors a three-week Middle East Bible Seminar in Jordan and Israel for students and for interested alumni. The next one will run in 1979. Excuse me, I must go; a special CBS program on the Middle East is just coming on.

Sadat from p. 3

Why the Arab Initiative?

One question everyone is asking is why Anwar Sadat acted the way he did when he did. There are no exact answers. From the time he came to power in 1969, Sadat has given signals that he is ready to deal with Israel. The Egyptians interpreted the war of 1973 as a victory for them which removed the psychological stigma of a defeated power entreating the victors. The Sinai accords of 1975, though negotiated by third powers, have worked well. Sadat was also impatient with the prospect of the Geneva conference. Indeed there is some evidence that he felt the PLO and Syria would make demands which would scuttle any possibilities of peace. Sadat was also fearful that Israel was about to annex the west bank which Prime Minister Begin calls Samaria and Judea. He could not have avoided seeing articles in the British and American press threatening a lightning attack by Israel. Whatever the answer, Sadat felt the same way as the Israeli writer, A. B. Yehoshua, who observed, "you do not achieve peace from history."

U.S. Participation

Finally, what of the American involvement? President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin have given President Carter credit for the new initiative. Sadat continues to insist that Washington holds "99% of the cards in this game." Begin visited Washington to clear his proposals before a return visit to Sadat. Both sides have demanded agreement and support of the U.S. before making concessions. Secretaries of State Kissinger and Vance have expended enormous amounts of time and energy in an effort to facilitate negotiations.

Whether Washington has as much clout in the Middle East as Sadat and Begin say is open to question. Certainly Israel is deeply beholden to American foreign aid (economic and military) and American Jewish financial support. But America also supplies a great deal of foreign aid to Jordan, Egypt, and Syria, ranking only second to Saudi Arabia as a source of funds for these countries even though together they receive half of what Israel receives from the U.S. Superpower status is one reason why the U.S. is so deeply involved; equally important, however, is the way American diplomats have managed to develop trust in both camps. The world hopes that this trust can become a basis for peace and not fall hostage to age-old enmity.

with different beliefs are "infidels." Laura said she had never been placed in the "role of unbeliever" until the day she was in a Jordanian restaurant and a Muslim waiter, seeing the cross on her necklace, asked, "Are you a Christian?" When Laura said she was, the Arab shook his head gravely, saying, "What a pity. Maybe some day you will see the light."

The people who seem to suffer the most from religious prejudice, Jim believes, are the Christians. Jim visited an Arab Christian friend of his in Bethlehem and discovered that Christians living in the Middle East face discrimination from all sides. Jim's friend, Michael David, a 1974 graduate from Goshen, runs a home for the blind, but he receives no aid from Bethlehem's Muslim city government because he is a Christian and no help from the Israeli government because he is an Arab.

One night on their way to Jerusalem, Jim and Michael were stopped by several Israeli guards whose duty it was to check the licenses of all cars coming from occupied territory. However, the soldiers did more than check Michael's license. "The soldiers ridiculed Michael," Jim said, "from beginning to end just because he was an Arab. They used psychologically abusive language."

But he said that the tension between Arabs and Jews was "more evident between the soldiery and citizens than between neighbors who lived together on an everyday basis." Laura agreed, telling of a Palestinian merchant she met in Jerusalem who told her it was "remarkable" how well his wife and he got along — especially since she was a Jew.

Jim believes that most Arabs and Jews want peace, but "higher-ups" prolong the bitterness; tension is found more in the political realm and, from there, is "ingrained in the people." He noticed a "deep-seated loyalty" in both Arabs and Jews, a willingness on the part of "even the most insignificant" to die for their country.

Perhaps the present-day tension between Arabs and Jews should not really be seen as a modern, or foreign, element in the "Land of the Bible," after all. Scripture records the Egyptians, the Caananites, the Babylonians and the Romans all claiming territories and borders within this region.

Director of Alumni Relations

From computers to buckets—that's how the view from the northwest corner went today. In reflection, this may symbolize something of what we are about at GC.

In a three-hour work session this morning, a few of us slogged through details of converting our 14,500 alumni records to computer storage. Yes, your alumni record at GC, now on a dog-eared six-by-seven-inch card, will soon be tucked out of sight on a disk in GC's new PDP 11/70 computer. While the record goes out of (my) sight, we anticipate increased visibility and efficiency for alumni services. Meanwhile, the end benefits are nearly overshadowed by the effort involved. A major reason for a computer at GC is the imperative of student literacy in computer use, whatever the academic discipline.

This evening students gathered in Assembly Hall to see and discuss a film on Mother Teresa of Calcutta. Mother Teresa believes quite literally the Matthew 25 "I was hungry" account; she lives on the same meager rations that she distributes to the destitute and dying of Calcutta. She and her sisters each own two simple white outfits of clothing and a bucket.

Sometimes life feels like a yo-yo, between bucket and computer. To help young people find the meaning of Culture for Service, in a world of computers and Calcutta slums, continues to be GC's task.

The English Department planned a series of monthly poetry workshops for students and interested community members which began Feb. 1. Robert Hosteter, assistant professor of English, led the first session. Robert has written a book-length collection of poetry entitled "Many Mistresses," and has had over a dozen poems and a short story published in a half-dozen magazines. He has also written five dramas and is now working on a full-length play about the American Indian for the 1978 Mennonite World Conference. Other sessions will be led by Gwendolyn Brooks, Pulitzer-Prizing winning poet from Chicago; Peter Fallon, an Irish poet; a poet appearing also in a "Nature as Muse" program; and Nick Lindsay, GC poet-in-residence from Edisto Island, South Carolina. Workshop participants submit a poem a week prior to each workshop; discussion then focuses on individual poems.

BLIZZARD HELP

About 200 GC students, organized by Norman Kauffmann and Fred Litwiller of the Student Development Division, helped community members during the wild Midwest blizzard of late January. Small groups of students worked from one to eight hours digging out streets, driveways, and stranded motorists. One student, Liz Pfund of West Newton, MA, strapped on cross-country skis to deliver groceries, medicine, and messages to snowed-in families. Another student, Rusty Bonham of Holland, PA, organized a shuttle service to transport students downtown to clear fire hydrants. Nursing students and faculty virtually "manned" the OB floor at Goshen General Hospital. Community residents were grateful for the college help.

TROPICAL AG SEMINAR

A Tropical Agriculture Seminar will be hosted at GC June 19 to 30. The Seminar, sponsored jointly by MCC, Bethel College, KS, EMC, and Goshen College, is coordinated by biology professor Frank Bishop. Each day the seminar will focus on some specific aspect of tropical agriculture, such as soils, pests, vegetable production, fruit production, or small animal production. Discussions will also include sociological, economic, and theological concerns of agriculture production practice in the tropics.

COACH OF THE YEAR

GC Soccer Coach Dwain Hartzler was elected "Coach of the Year" by fellow coaches within the NAIA District 21. The Maple Leafs finished the season with a 12-7-1 record. The team won the District 21 Tournament, the Area IV Tournament, and placed eighth in NAIA National Finals at Huntsville, Alabama.

The men's basketball team, coached by Ken Pletcher, posted a 11-10 overall record and a 5-7 record in Mid-Central Conference play. The women's basketball record was 9-4. Ruth Gunden coached.

THE FLAG

Several students recently requested that the U.S. and U.N. flags on campus be removed for theological reasons. Before reaffirming an official policy that the flags fly, administrators called for a campus-wide poll to determine opinion on the issue. The referendum, coordinated by the student advisory board, indicated a 2 to 1 vote in favor of retaining the flags: 427 to 232. The flags will remain.

Professor Stanley Shenk

Guest editorial by Stanley Shenk

Professor Shenk is exceptionally well qualified to write on the Middle East. Last year—from May 20 to June 11, 1977—he led his sixth tour to the Middle East, teaching his third Goshen College bible course abroad. He spent the summer of 1972 studying at Hebrew University and working on the Tel Qasile archaeological project in Israel.

He also conducted a research project on the Coptic churches of Egypt in the summer and fall of 1975, and served as a volunteer in the excavation at Tel Dan in Israel in the summer of 1976.

THE MIDDLE EAST: A focal point of interest

On television and in magazines, the scenes appear again and again: the stones and skyline of Jerusalem; the Nile from a hotel balcony in Cairo; ancient irrigation wheels in Egypt; kibbutz tractors in Israel; archaeologists probing in their earthen squares; worshippers praying in mosques, churches, and at the Wall; the faces of Sadat, Begin, Assad, and King Hussein.

We look and watch—week after week, month after month. Recently I asked myself, "What are the factors which focus interest so intently on the Middle East?" I think there are at least seven.

It is a focal point of Jewish, Christian, and Muslim emotions. Here Abraham journeyed, and David ruled, and Solomon built; and here, according to Jewish belief, on the Temple Mount is the great rock where Abraham was ready to offer Isaac—and nearby is the Wailing, or Western, Wall with its massive stones from Herod's western retaining wall for the enlarged platform of the Second Temple.

Here, according to the Gospels, Jesus was born in Bethlehem, and died and rose again in Jerusalem; and here are the shrine-churches of The Nativity and The Holy Sepulchre.

Here, according to Muslim belief, is the great rock where Abraham was ready to offer Ishmael, and from which Muhammed ascended to heaven; and here is the splendid edifice, The Dome of the Rock.

Jews and Muslims venerate the Rock; Jews sway in prayer at the Wall; and Christians bow in prayer at the Manger Grotto and the Empty Tomb. These four sites are emotional foci for hundreds of millions of the adherents of the world's three monotheistic religions.

It is where Biblical history and physical geography meet. Both the ancient Hebrews and the early Christians believed that God acted in history. They recounted "the saving deeds of the Lord" as Samuel did (in I Samuel 12:7) and as Paul did (at Antioch in Pisidia in Acts 13). Middle Eastern geography, and Palestinian geography in particular, is where the deeds of the Lord took place. Because both Hebrews and Christians were history-conscious, they tended to remember through the centuries where things happened.

It is a major locale of continuing archaeological research. Again this summer, expeditions will go out to Lachish, Dan, Tell Halif (possibly the Biblical Ziklag), Timnah, Caesarea, and many other locations. Volunteers will swarm to Israel from colleges, seminaries, universities, the divorce courts, the ranks of the clergy, and rabbinical schools. The diggers will seek history, "roots," broken pots, crumbling walls, romance, faith, and adventure.

It is the contemporary center of world Jewry. Most Israeli Jews are not strongly committed to the serious practice of conventional Judaism. But the modern entity of Israel has become the cultural center for many, if not most, of the 14½ million who make up the present world Jewish population. Dispersed over the centuries and millennia into almost all the nations of the world, the Jews have now found a national homeland. This, of course, has produced tragedy for over two million Palestinians who also rightfully consider Palestine as their homeland. But over one-fifth of the Jews in the world are now in Israel. This is a demographic and political fact. And in spite of its huge burden of defense spending, Israel is achieving economic viability.

Here in Israel are the kibbutzim (over 250 of them), with their emphasis of communal sharing, vigorous patriotism, hard work, economic success, and participation at high levels in the armed forces and the government.

Here, too, is the main room of the Holocaust memorial at Yad Vashem, with its gas flame, its shadows, and its six million tiny stones embedded in the floor. Here, amid the terrible memories it enshrines, one can understand the Jewish passion of the late 1940's for a place of refuge—a passion that finally, for better or for worse, produced the modern State of Israel.

It is the stage of a dramatic conflict between the Jews and the Arabs, both of whom carry the glory and the burden of special historical backgrounds and religious convictions. The clash between the Zionists (those unique nationalists who wanted an independent country but who first had to transport themselves to that country) and the Palestinians did not involve a sinister and wicked plot by either. The European Zionists were naive. They scarcely considered at first that far-away Palestine had a people of its own. Upon discovering this disturbing fact, they went ahead with the wistful hope that the prior inhabitants would welcome an expanding Jewish community in the land on the basis of the greater prosperity it would generate for all. But if the Zionists were naive, the Palestinians were notably incapable of the type of accommodation that might have left adequate room for both peoples in the land. It was a case of two nationalisms coming into seemingly inevitable conflict over the same piece of land. Perhaps today (but only perhaps), at the turn of a new year, in what may be the dawn of a new era in the Middle East, room may yet be found west of the Jordan River for both peoples to live together in self-respect and peace.

It is an arena of human suffering. The Palestinians, in particular, have suffered heavily—in self-esteem, loss of homes and possessions, and in many cases, in loss of hope. Charitable organizations, including our own Mennonite Central Committee, have tried to meet elemental needs and to help people prepare for new vocational possibilities. But Israelis have also suffered from the ceaseless turmoil. Both in the spring of 1967 and in the opening days of the 1973 Yom Kippur War a very real fear swept Israel from end to end. An MCC worker in Jerusalem in 1973, whose main task had been to assist Palestinians, sought out Jewish acquaintances on that occasion in order to strengthen lines of communication and friendship with them. "These people were suffering too," he said later.

It is a possible tinder-box for a third World War. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are deeply involved in the Middle East. It is all too easy to imagine a variety of scenarios for a Middle Eastern crisis which could escalate into a nuclear exchange between the two superpowers.

For all these reasons, and more, we continue to watch the Middle East. We are fascinated, concerned, fearful.

Goshen College, like many other educational institutions, is involved in the Middle East. Alumni are serving and have served there. Dennis MacDonald has had kibbutz experience in Israel and has studied Modern Hebrew there. Dean Lapp will be serving the MCC in Jerusalem next year as a consultant. Once every two years the college sponsors a three-week Middle East bible Seminar in Jordan and Israel for students and for interested alumni. The next one will run in 1979. Excuse me, I must go; a special CBS program on the Middle East is just coming on.

Border-crossings —

Shari Miller
Class of 1980

Taken from the top of the ancient Citadel of Rabbath-Ammon, Jordan, this picture of Tom and Conrad Beck looks down at the Roman theater in the heart of Ammon. Rabbath-Ammon was the city besieged by Joab, David's general; it was here Joab carried out David's instructions to arrange for the death of Uriah, the husband of Bathsheba.

"Israelis are our cousins, and we want to get along with them but they are always causing trouble. Anywhere the Israelis go," the Jordanian said, "they make trouble."

Mary Arslan heard these words last summer during Goshen College's Middle East Bible Seminar. Taught by Professor Stanley Shenk, the three-week course included people of various age groups, from a high-school senior to a sixty-seven-year-old. Mary Arslan, Laura Doty and Jim Brenneman were among the ten Goshen students who participated in this trip to Jordan and Israel.

As she described the seminar, Mary said, "It was like going on a road through the Bible." The group saw women along the roadside gleaning grain and shepherds near Bethlehem watching their sheep. They saw the place where David slew Goliath and where Jesus fed the 5,000.

But the "road through the Bible" did have some "border-crossings," times when tension between Jews and Arabs intruded upon the ancient landscape, bringing the traveler, in Jim's words, "back to the modern day."

Laura said that in Jordan she first became aware of this tension when the group was advised not to talk about Israel, not even to mention the name. "We didn't want to anger any people," Laura said, "so we played a little game. Instead of talking about 'Israel,' we talked about 'Disneyland.'" Once the group reached 'Disneyland,'

Jordan became 'McDonald's.'

While in Jordan, the students were also careful never to order a Coke. "Because the Coke Company went to Israel first," Laura explained, "Jordan doesn't want anything to do with it. Jordanians drink Pepsi-Cola instead."

Tension took a more tangible form at a border-crossing (a literal one) between Jordan and Israel, where armed Israeli guards inspected the group's possessions for two hours. "Because we were coming from Jordan, they didn't trust us," Mary said. "They x-rayed our shoes and luggage. They even made us take pictures with our cameras pointed at the ceiling to make sure they weren't guns."

But the longer they stayed in the Middle East, Jim said, the more he came to understand the distrust between the Arabs and Jews and the complexity of their fears. He said he found it impossible to "take sides"—for although the Arabs have been pushed from their homeland, so have the Jews. For Jim, the Arab refugee camps on the West Bank and the memorial of Yad Vashem, honoring the six million Jews who were executed in World War II, stand as symbols of the tragic history of both peoples.

A difference in cultures, Laura believes, also contributes to the feelings of tension between Arabs and Jews. She discovered that the Arabs in Jordan are very conscious of their manners. If two Arab businessmen meet for a discussion, they will first go through a long ceremony of questions: "How has your day been?" "How is your wife?" "How are your children?" "After the important questions have been asked," Laura grinned, "they'll sneak in the business and then get back to the pleasantries." On the other hand, she feels that Jews are much more "direct in their transactions."

The group's Jordanian and Israeli tour guides, Laura said, exemplified this difference between cultures. In an introductory speech, the Arab guide gave the group "the red carpet," going "on and on in flowery speech" about how glad he was to lead such a "fine group." The Israeli guide, meeting the group for the first time, was more abrupt. He simply stated, "This is it. Let's go."

Laura believes that this difference between cultures is the "root of a lot of bitterness." She said, "It bothers the Jews that the Jordanians are so hung up on ritual that they won't even talk with Israel." The Arabs believe that negotiation would be an act of acknowledgement and thus a sign of Jordanian acceptance of the Israeli state.

Religion is another cause of animosity between the Jews and Arabs. Laura said that both Muslims and Jews consider certain traditional sites "holy" and often these areas are causes of conflict. A little more than ten years ago, when the Arabs occupied the Old City of Jerusalem, the Jews were not allowed to worship at the Wailing Wall and other holy places. Now that the Jews control all parts of the city, they grant local Muslims and Muslim visitors the right to worship freely. But the Jews have not forgotten "past injustices" and they are still bitter.

A symbol of those injustices, Laura said, and "a real sore point among the Jews" is the hotel that was built prior to 1967 on the Mount of Olives, a holy site for the Jews. A Jewish graveyard stood on the Mount, and it is said that the Jordanians used some of its stones to build the hotel. Laura said that the Jews view the hotel as an outright desecration.

Then, too many Muslims and Jews believe that only they have the "true faith" and that those with different beliefs are "infidels." Laura said she had never been placed in the "role of unbeliever" until the day she was in a Jordanian restaurant and a Muslim waiter, seeing the cross on her necklace, asked, "Are you a Christian?" When Laura said she was, the Arab shook his head gravely, saying, "What a pity. Maybe some day you will see the light."

The people who seem to suffer the most from religious prejudice, Jim believes, are the Christians. Jim visited an Arab Christian friend of his in Bethlehem and discovered that Christians living in the Middle East face discrimination from all sides. Jim's friend, Michael David, a 1974 graduate from Goshen, runs a home for the blind, but he receives no aid from Bethlehem's Muslim city government because he is a Christian and no help from the Israeli government because he is an Arab.

One night on their way to Jerusalem, Jim and Michael were stopped by several Israeli guards whose duty it was to check the licenses of all cars coming from occupied territory. However, the soldiers did more than check Michael's license. "The soldiers ridiculed Michael," Jim said, "from beginning to end just because he was an Arab. They used psychologically abusive language."

But he said that the tension between Arabs and Jews was "more evident between the soldiery and citizens than between neighbors who lived together on an everyday basis." Laura agreed, telling of a Palestinian merchant she met in Jerusalem who told her it was "remarkable" how well his wife and he got along—especially since she was a Jew.

Jim believes that most Arabs and Jews want peace, but "higher-ups" prolong the bitterness; tension is found more in the political realm and, from there, is "ingrained in the people." He noticed a "deep-seated loyalty" in both Arabs and Jews, a willingness on the part of "even the most insignificant" to die for their country.

Perhaps the present-day tension between Arabs and Jews should not really be seen as a modern, or foreign, element in the "Land of the Bible," after all. Scripture records the Egyptians, the Canaanites, the Babylonians and the Romans all claiming territories and borders within this region.

Goshen Alums Call Nazareth Their Home

"It's terribly exciting to see the steps that have been taken recently toward peace in the Middle East," Joe '63 and Elaine Miller '64 Haines have lived most of the past ten years in Israel. Their eyes light with deeply felt emotion as they comment on recent events in that area.

Is there reason for optimism? "We dare not be pessimistic," Elaine says. "Now that the unthinkable has happened—an Egyptian leader has visited Israel—the way is open for further steps toward peace. This is the time for Christian, Jew and Muslim to unite in prayers for peace."

Observing events in the Middle East from their furlough home in Goshen, Joe and Elaine feel the drama of these events in very human terms. In Nazareth, their home for the past five years, Jew and Arab live side by side. With close friends in both communities, the Haineses have felt the pain of the history and the present situation of both groups.

Living in Israel, one is reminded of the complex history behind today's events, including the part that Christians have played. "Standing beside someone in a museum, you suddenly notice the concentration camp number tattooed on his arm. Or you visit the memorial to the Holocaust, and feel sickened at the depravity of man. The Arabs remember the Crusades; the Jews remember the Inquisition and forced 'conversions.' We live with a sense of repentance for that history."

Israel is such a small country that everyone has been close to the wars of recent history. Young men and women with war injuries are a constant reminder of the conflict. "People there seem to live every day with life-and-death issues. It makes some of our concerns here in North America seem superficial." Since the Yom Kippur War of 1973, an annual inflation rate of 35 to 40 percent has caused much suffering.

Joe and Elaine describe the purpose of their presence in Israel as "reconciliation ... but that's hard to describe, it's on a one-to-one basis, low-key." Joe is chaplain at the Nazareth Hospital, an interdenominational institution run by the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. Elaine has occasionally taught in the nursing school of the hospital. They presently work under the Mennonite Board of Missions. Earlier assignments, at other locations in Israel, were under the Mennonite Central Committee.

Because the Mennonites in Israel have chosen not to establish Mennonite churches, the mission personnel are free of some of the western missionary image, and thus apparently are more approachable. For example, an Arab Anglican congregation felt free to ask Joe to serve as their pastor for an interim period. In small Bible study groups, Joe and Elaine found Arab Christians seeking growth and fellowship which their ancient churches, regrettably, do not provide. The Haineses also supervised a small bookstore which offered Christian literature in Arabic.

Joe has a unique ministry to Arab Christian prisoners; he is the only person who has been granted permission to visit them in a pastoral role. Some of these political prisoners are serving life sentences and have little other contact with the outside world.

During this school year, Joe is a student at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart. He and Elaine, with their three children, will return to their home in Nazareth in August.

ANOTHER RESPONSE TO THE SADAT VISIT ...

Following are excerpts from one of Kathryn's letters:

What do you think of Sadat's visit? That's a question asked of us frequently these days. People here, especially West Bank people, [called it] incredible before he came and are still pinching themselves to believe it really happened. Last week the activists of the B.U. student senate called a strike to protest his coming. Students felt he had no right to come and speak for all Arabs—a claim he never made, but they felt his visit implied that. Also, they felt that in coming he was recognizing Israel as a state, the last thing many Palestinians desire. Many students did agree with me that there was great value in face-to-face dialogue. Generally, people are feeling more optimistic about the situation here. At this point it seems the first part of the "peace miracle" has happened.

Teaching here is a unique opportunity. The (Catholic) sisters and brothers who staff the university are so dedicated and good to work with, and the students are warm and friendly. They often invite Ken and me to their villages and give us little tours and refreshments in their homes. Arab hospitality is beautiful and genuine.

Kathryn Hunsberger '67 Seitz is teaching at Bethlehem University this year, while her husband Ken, a doctoral student in Scriptural studies at the University of Notre Dame [Indiana], spends a year in concentrated Hebrew studies.

Bertha Wenger '53 Swarr has lived in Israel since 1957. Recently she has served as part of the pastoral and counseling team of Immanuel House, an international Christian congregation in Jaffa.

Off Campus Events For Alumni

CURE THE END-OF-WINTER BLAHS WITH A SPRING BREAK IN LAURELVILLE APRIL 21-23

Does a weekend of music and celebration led by Professor Mary K. Oyer sound good to you right now? Think about it—a retreat weekend in the Laurel Highlands of Western Pennsylvania, sponsored by the Alumni of Western Pennsylvania who will host a banquet for alums and friends on April 22.

Registration, meals and lodging are reasonable; see the coupon on the back page of this issue.

The weekend schedule is flexible, allowing participants to plan their own activities as well as participate in large- and small-group singing. There'll be a Saturday evening presentation on African arts, especially music, by Mary Oyer.

Alumni contributions from the classes of 1970-1977 have helped redecorate the Snack Shop area, creating a warm contrast to the snow and cold outside. Potted trees add a touch of spring year-round. [Photo by Paul Kauffman.]

Martha Yoder '77 spent nine months as a technical associate at Nazareth Hospital in 1976 under MBM. She is now a medical student at Indiana University.

EXPLORE SEA LIFE IN THE FLORIDA KEYS

For some alumni families and singles, a week of exploring sea life in the Florida Keys has combined fun, sun, and pushing out new horizons.

GC Professors Jonathan Roth and Franklin Bishop will direct a week of marine biology in Florida from May 13 to 20. This will follow the GC study term there. The one week non-credit course schedule will be flexible, allowing for individual interests.

The facilities of the recently constructed biology station are available, with participants lodging in the facilities of Lime Tree Resort. Registration is $150 for the first adult in the family, $100 for spouse, and $50 per child. Details are available from the Alumni Office; see coupon on back page.

Note to Alumni Class Agents

A special word of appreciation to 180 of you who served as class agents this year. Your efforts last November were a major factor in keeping our fund moving toward the $300,000 goal.

We had planned for, and promised you, a second round of letters in February. We found, however, that the office work involved in this is more than we can handle again in this fund year.

So thanks to each of you, and we may call on you another year.

TAKE A MINI-SST TO HONDURAS!

From June 24 to July 5, you can join Spanish Professor Robert Yoder and his wife Dorothy in the capital city of Tegucigalpa, Honduras, taking short trips to San Pedro Sula and Tela Beach. The Yoders have led three SST groups in Honduras and can help you explore your area of interest there.

The mini-SST group will visit historic and scenic sites near Tegucigalpa; see highlights of another culture on a tour through the city; call on an Amish community; and hear lectures on the history, customs, and social/family structures of the country. The short trip to San Pedro Sula will include excursions to a banana plantation, Mayan ruins, and an old Spanish fortress.

Your cost? $625 per person, including air fare from the U.S., lodging and transportation in Honduras, registration, and five field trip meals. If you choose to stay with a family in Tegucigalpa, breakfast and supper are also included. Your only other expense is transportation to the group departure point, either New Orleans or Miami.

Care to join the group? See the coupon on the back of this issue. Robert and Dorothy Yoder will send information to help you prepare for the trip. Remember, your reservation is due by May 5.

Linda Nolt '69 and David Helmus are teaching at Ramses College for Girls in Cairo, in addition to serving as Mennonite Central Committee country representatives for Egypt. Prior to beginning this assignment in the summer of 1977, they both taught at the Delaware County Christian School at Newton Square, PA.

Robbin's and Vicki's bike at a lookout along the Oregon coast.

TWO ALUMS BIKE TO HAWAII

Last summer, Vicki and Robbin Mester took a different route to Hawaii from the usual air or sea trips most of us think about. Below is an account of their experience.

From Missoula to Hawaii on Bike, Summer '77
by Vicki '71 and Robbin '70 Mester

We left from Hesston and went by truck with our bikes and gear to Montana. We arrived in Missoula and stayed at the bike inn there to make last-minute equipment repairs; then we began the ride. It rained the first three days. We crossed our first mountain the first day out—Ido Pass, Idaho (elevation 5,233 feet). We soon felt sore muscles in our legs and shoulders, since we had not trained for this trip. (It was Vicki's first bike ride of over 50 miles, but Robbin had led a Bikecentennial trip in Kentucky in 1976.) After the first five days, our bodies were much stronger and we averaged 56 miles a day.

We planned to bike to the Oregon coast, up to Astoria, and then back to Portland where we would catch a plane to Honolulu. When the going got rough we would remind each other of the plane awaiting us in Portland.

We enjoyed biking as a unique means of travel. Besides giving us the chance really to see and experience America, we felt that bicycling was just plain good for the whole being. It allowed us the chance to hear the birds, smell the flowers, and feel the rain and wind. It also let us meet people like the couple at the top of White Bird Hill who gave us roast beef sandwiches and Bing cherries; the couple we met in Richland who let us sleep in their home; and the Frame family from Astoria who fed us fresh salmon. We stayed in basements, guestrooms, back yards, patios, old schoolhouses, hotels, bike inns and two Mennonite Your Way homes. Both the Kenagys and the Goertzens were very willing to take us in and show us good Mennonite hospitality.

Hawaii was beautiful and a great place to rest. The riding we did there was harder than on the mainland, but very rewarding. We stayed with friends in Honolulu and from there travelled to Maui, Molokai and Kauai.

When all was packed and pedalled it had been a marvelous trip despite hard times, head winds, painful legs, flat tires, and snarling dogs. When the land changes and we reach a new place, when the mountains finally crest for us, we know what we have done and why. We'd do it again.

SPECIAL EVENTS SCHEDULED FOR ALUMNI WEEKEND '78

If your GC class year ends in 3 or 8, make a note to save the weekend of October 13-15 for your class reunion. Special events of the weekend will include the Old Timers' Luncheon, honoring the Class of 1928, and the Holiday Inn Weekend for the 25-year class, the grads of 1953.

A weekend highlight will be the Nursing Department's celebration of the 25th anniversary of the first nursing graduating class. The Department is planning a conference on health care ethics, especially related to nursing, for Thursday and Friday, October 12 and 13; a Friday evening banquet featuring an alumni speaker and honoring Orpha B. Mosemann, Associate Professor Emerita and director of the division from its inception until 1971; and a department open house Saturday morning.

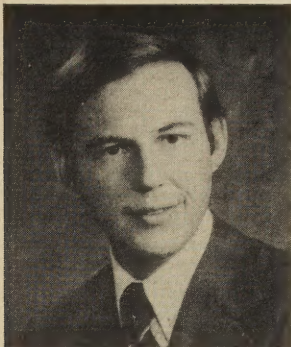

Other events on campus will focus on the new John S. Umble Center. Of special interest to education majors will be programming on the theme of "Early Childhood Education at GC," celebrating the 20th year of the GC Laboratory Kindergarten. The traditional alumni banquet will be held Saturday evening. The alumni office plans to get weekend details out in time for alumni to make early motel reservations. With a home football game at the University of Notre Dame, lodging accommodations in the area will be at a premium that weekend!

FORMER ALUMNI DIRECTOR NOFZIGER DIES SUDDENLY

Daryl J. Nofziger '67, GC's director of alumni relations from 1974-75, died suddenly on January 31. Daryl was out jogging when he was stricken; death resulted from heart failure related to complications of diabetes.

Surviving are his wife Elizabeth (Libby) Yoder '65 Nofziger and children Jennifer, eight years old, and Matthew, five years old. Libby is responsible for health maintenance physicals in the office of Dr. Donald Minter '50; she also teaches prenatal classes at Goshen General Hospital. Daryl was employed most recently as a salesman for Quality Glass Company in Goshen. Previous to his employment at GC he was manager of Provident Bookstores in Bloomington, Illinois and Scottsdale, Pennsylvania.

A memorial fund has been established, to provide scholarships for Goshen College business students.

BETTIE NORMAN'S MUSIC WILL BE MISSED

Bettie Norman, Assistant Professor of Music since 1962, died in Goshen Hospital on February 16, 1978. She had been ill with cancer for 11 years.

Holding a master's degree in string pedagogy, she taught part-time for several years in the Goshen public schools, where she sparked great enthusiasm for playing string instruments. She found it necessary to stop her public school work after learning of her illness, but still found energy to work extensively in music with the children of the College Mennonite Church. She also served as music teacher and orchestra director at Bethany Christian High School for a year.

I am struck by how little such facts convey about the essence of Bettie's life, a life that touched many of us so poignantly. Bettie was a friend and a colleague for all seasons. You could laugh or cry with Bettie, for she was one of those lovely people who have insight, empathy, and sensitivity. She did a great deal for the music education field, giving our program a quality that was uncommon in the music schools of the sixties. She was a fine teacher, imaginative and thorough, blessed with the ability to say even hard things softly. Her way of relating to people was extraordinary—and many people, very young and very old and in between, considered her a special friend.

Bettie's sense of humor was almost legendary. She could be outrageously funny. She wasn't a clown; that wasn't her style. Her vision of life's absurdities was a perfect 20/20, and her cheerfulness and irrepressible good humor permeated our department despite 11 years of chemotherapy, a feat which seems even more remarkable now than it did then.

I am grateful for the years of life that were given to her since the beginning of her illness. They were rich years for all of us who loved her. We saw her falter, and then continue to grow professionally and spiritually. Her faith was deep and mature. It allowed her increasingly more freedom to be herself, without artifice and without undue fears ... When Bettie died, many noticed the evidence of faith that allowed her to die with such peace. I want to remember even more the evidence of faith that moved her to live life with such uncommon grace.

From The Northeast Corner

—Alice M. Roth
Director of Alumni Relations

From the northeast corner of the Ad Building, on this sunny spring day ... a note that your participation is needed, in several ways.

This issue reflects the themes of springtime at GC: graduation, job search, career concerns. We on campus are increasingly aware of the ways you alumni, in many jobs and geographies, can help GC students in their vocational search and decisions. The forms on page 5 are designed to tap some of this resource.

On the back page of this Bulletin is another request for your involvement. When the alumni board met on April 15, the upcoming board election was an agenda item. Dissatisfaction was expressed with the present system of finding ten good candidates, knowing that only five of them would be elected. Alumni have commented on their ballots that they feel inadequate to vote in the cases where they are not acquainted with either candidate.

This year, the board would like for you to nominate new members. The board will review these nominations, considering geography, interests and class years represented, then present a slate of five names to be confirmed at the fall alumni banquet business meeting. So think of people who could represent your interests at GC, and who could represent GC in their community.

Through the annual fund, many alums are helping to keep at GC the quality experience they knew. This Bulletin asks for contributions from your fund of friendship and experience. Thanks for your replies.

COMMENCEMENT

A procession of 251 GC seniors marched from the Church-Chapel to the Union Auditorium to participate in the 80th annual commencement April 16. Dr. Paulos Mar Gregorios, from Kerala, India, addressed the seniors, faculty, and guests. Degrees were conferred following the address. Other activities in the commencement weekend included a nurses' pinning ceremony, a senior banquet and program, and baccalaureate. Graduates and their families also met informally with the faculty of the student's academic department and were hosted by President and Mrs. Burkholder at a reception. Graduates in the class of 1978 come from 21 states and eight foreign countries.

ABOUT DR. PAULOS MAR GREGORIOS

Dr. Gregorios, born Paul Verghese in India, was teaching school in Ethiopia when he met world traveler and missions statesman Orie O. Miller. Paul expressed interest in completing his college work to Miller, who naturally suggested Goshen College. Paul graduated from Goshen College in 1952 and went on to earn advanced degrees in theology from Princeton Theological Seminary, Yale University, and Serampore University, India. He is now principal of the Orthodox Seminary in Kottayam, India, and head of the ecclesiastical province of Dehli as a monk within the Orthodox Syrian Church of the East (India). He has served as an administrator, educator, and writer in Ethiopia, Prague, and Geneva as well as India.

"JILL"

The benches, aisles, and doorways of the Church-Chapel were packed with people who came to watch the film "Jill" April 2. The film chronicled the final months of former admissions counselor Jill Liechty as she succumbed to cancer last fall. The film, directed by Ken Harris of Quadrus Communications, was an emotional tribute to a lovely young woman who had an unusually strong and simple faith in God.

SENIOR HONORS

Two graduating seniors, Jim Ebersole and Steve Denlinger, received distinguished awards from the National Science Foundation and the North American Fund for Theological Education. Jim, a natural science major from Archbold, Ohio, will apply his three-year fellowship to master's and doctoral study at the University of Colorado. There he will concentrate on field plant ecology at the University's Institute of Arctic and Alpine Research. Steve will use his fellowship (formerly called the Rockefeller Fellowship) for study at Harvard University Divinity School. From East Petersburg, PA, Steve majors in history, English, and natural science at GC. He hopes to study at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries before applying to medical schools. His life interest is to reflect theologically on the natural and social sciences in the life of the church.

ECON CHAIR

The establishment of a Chair in Economics — the first chair in the history of Goshen College — was announced by President Burkholder this spring. The chair is to be endowed through a gift by Howard S. and Myra Brembeck, Goshen. Income will be generated from an initial gift of stock valued at $259,000 from CTB, Inc., Milford, IN. Brembeck is Chairman of the Board at CTB.

BACH FESTIVAL

The Bach Festival Weekend in early April placed another milestone in the great music tradition of GC with a moving performance of the classical musician's "St. Matthew Passion." Both musicians and auditors were deeply engaged in this narration of the Passion event, creating a profoundly worshipful, even overwhelming, experience as they testified to a tragic interlude in the Incarnation. The Bach Festival, in addition to the performance of the "Passion," included a solo recital program by guest alumni, an organ recital, and a chamber concert. Guest lecturer was alumnus J. Evan Kreider, professor of music at the University of British Columbia at Vancouver.

GET-TOGETHERS

One GC student who recently took an informal count of engaged couples on campus came up with a number of 30. Social life at GC may sometimes appear to be comatose, but it is far from dead.

FACULTY NEWS

DELMAR GOOD received a Faculty Open Fellowship from Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis. Del will apply his fellowship to a sabbatical year of reading and work in public finance and decision-making. Beginning in September 1978, he will spend nine months as an unpaid legislative assistant to the U.S. Senator Mark O. Hatfield in Washington, D.C. Other faculty planning sabbaticals and leaves next year are: EVELYN DRIVER, an educational leave; BRUCE GLICK, in Costa Rica; ARLIN HUNSBERGER, research and writing in Haiti; J. HOWARD KAUFFMAN, DUANE KAUFFMANN, in Florida; C. NORMAN KRAUS, in India; JOHN LAPP, in Jerusalem; LON SHERER, in Japan; and ROBERT YODER, in Spain. The Board of Overseers in March granted two faculty promotions and tenure for one professor: WILLIAM MILLER was promoted from assistant to associate professor, and ERVIN BECK from associate to full professor; CATHERINE MUMAW was given tenure. MERLE JACOBS received a new three-year grant of $84,983 from the National Institute of Health to continue his research on "The Effects of Beta-Alanine on Behavior and Structure." Merle's research with fruit flies will increase understanding of growth and aging mechanisms, and — it is hoped — discover new methods to control tumor growth, pathogenic fungi, and insects. STAN GROVE assists in the project. SST leaders selected for the 1978-79 school year are: RON and SALLY JO MILNE, Haiti; DAN and JOY HESS, Costa Rica; DON and MARIE CLEMENS, Belize; and HAROLD and PAT YODER, South Korea. In Honduras, the fall unit will be led by DEVON and MARCIA YODER and the winter and spring units by BRUCE and HELEN GLICK.

'78 PHONOTHON BIGGEST YET

With 76 volunteers talking to more than 2,600 friendly alumni across the country, the 1978 Phonothon boosted the annual alumni fund toward the $300,000 goal. A total of $30,234 was pledged during the March Phonothon; this compares to 29,000 pledged last year. Actual contributions from last year's effort totaled $42,000 by the end of the fund year.

Student volunteers enjoyed talking to alums, and found them congenial and supportive of the college. (The alumni volunteers expected that response!) Even people who felt they could not give this year often had a friendly word for the College.

Ralph Gunden, President of First National Bank, Goshen, chaired the Phonothon, and student Dick Armstrong was campus coordinator. Freshman Lois Groff, from Lancaster, PA, won the grand prize of a $200 tuition grant for totalling the most pledged dollars. Richard '61 and Shelly Hershberger helped to underwrite the prizes.

Contributing to the success of the Phonothon were the desks and phones available at Salem Bank, Goshen, and Mennonite Offices, Elkhart, and the discounted pizza from Goshen's Pizza Inn.

On April 1, the 1978 Fund total stood at $231,502. The fund year closes June 30—there is still time to send your gift if you have not yet contributed.

faith of our forebears ever singing the anabaptist vision ever singing.
An enclave of Mennonite Thought apart from the world, Mennonite singing four part harmony singing and most of the chords are related.
Singing a tune with notes of "servanthood" to each other and those in need notes of "discipleship"
"love" and "active peacemaking."
Humming the notes of the new Kingdom, God's Kingdom
ever singing, encouraging the "peoplehood" be faithful, be the church apart ever singing, encouraging community bringing together notes and harmonies into Handel Messiahs and Bach Passions.

goshencollegeeversinging
calling together Mennonite youth creating a strong base by surrounding them with dominant chords of sincere faculty and dynamic church leaders quiet sustained chords of life time friendships joyous, hopeful chords of hymnsings in the snackshop.
goshencollegeeversinging
creates the setting for the hymn and sends them out the young ambitious youth ever singing from a strong community singing, four part harmony singing to strengthen churches, to plant new ones.

goshen collegeeversinging I go. We go.
Singing. Four part harmony singing
Into a today world, a today world I go
And notes in four part harmony ring in my ears.
goshencollegeeversinging I go. We go.
To sing community, sing the church apart
on the university campus where Mennonites study
to become doctors, researchers, engineers, lawyers and go out into competitive, specialized job markets
apart from the world? four part harmony singing?
Goshen College notes ring but the chords clash in my ears.

goshencollegeeversinging I go. We go.
To sing "active peacemaking" in the classroom where to turn the other cheek means to be tromped on the playground?

the text book is devoted to Caucasians and war heroes?
I teach black children their rich but violent history?
my black and Latino students will go out to discrimination?
How sing "active peacemaking?" How sing four part harmony?
GOSHEN COLLEGE ever singing I go. We go.
To sing love
when a friend serves national guard duty once a month
another becomes an officer in the Army a minority Mennonite youth graduates from high school to attend a military academy?
How sing love? How sing understanding?
How sing Mennonite four part sing?
There are real people in these institutions

goshencollegeeversinging I go to sing "people-hood"
In a Mennonite Church where the Spanish churches are the fastest growing of all
where the Black churches are trying to be heard
I can't sing four part harmony here this Mennonite sing is different
I don't know the words and my tongue tangles
This is not the Mennonite sing I learned
It moves too slowly, it moves too fast,
There's complicated rhythm, my body is too stiff.
This singing isn't part of me
Where can I learn this new sing, Mennonite sing?

GOSHEN COLLEGE SING.
Sing four part harmony. Yes sing it, and Sing Chorritos too, with tamborines and marracas
learn to sing with new rhythm and vigor, new intensity
Sing Black Gospel, clap your hands sing it with your whole body with thumb pianos, drums, marimbas and carambas
stamp your feet, feel it from the inside out.

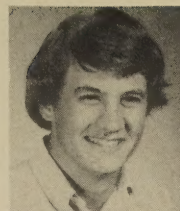

SING GOSHEN COLLEGE. DARE TO SING.
Dare to learn new ways of singing dare to sing, you who know new ways sing loud, make us listen
Dare the discord of a wrong note or mispronounced word
Dare to get it wrong.

SING GOSHEN COLLEGE. DARE TO SING.
Dare to pick up new melodies from humming hard hats
on city buses and busitos in el campo and on university campuses
Dare to create new Mennonite sing with the old notes
Sing for a today world in cannon with clusters sounding out of places like University of Iowa, Chicago
South Lawndale
Tegucigalpa, Blue Diamond Kentucky.

GOSHEN COLLEGE EVER SINGING.
How will it be?
The new song.

FROM COLLEGE TO THE FAMILY FARM

"Yeah, I majored in natural science. Graduated two years ago and farm with Dad now."

"Oh," replies a new acquaintance or old friend noddingly.

I've become accustomed to such exchanges since graduating from Goshen College and returning to my family's hog and seed corn farm in Illinois. Why would someone go to a small liberal arts college if he were going to farm? That seems to be an unasked question as I share my recent personal history. And at times I do need to ask that question and renew my conviction for being where I am.

Well, I suppose I basically do enjoy the style of life that farming offers. Farming actually can be a creative experience. There's a satisfaction in confronting a problem and working it out, in knowing a little bit about everything, and in making visible, measurable accomplishments.

Farming allows a great deal of self-determination. I like the privilege of working out my own daily schedule, making decisions with my family about how to operate the farm, and deciding when and where to sell commodities. I like watching things grow, and I suppose I like the open country in spite of mud, manure, heat, frozen toes, and dust in my contacts.

But so much for romantic ideas about farming. Farming is, and always has been, an economic endeavor, except for subsistence farming in parts of the world. North American farming is a business within a free enterprise system. And by engaging in such economic activity, farmers expose themselves to all the risks and pressures of the business world—and then some.

The point is that farming should not be seen as more conducive to simplicity or self-fulfillment than most other occupations. A farmer can be as frustrated, obsessed, or satisfied with his work as any school teacher or public accountant. It seems to me that few occupations necessarily dictate one's lifestyle—lifestyle being how we spend our time, energy and money, and how we treat people. Rather, our lifestyles are shaped by the values around which we orient ourselves, more or less in spite of most occupations.

Much more influential in my decision to come to the farm than my natural "bent" for farm living was my interest in the relationship between faith and life in a "grassroots" setting and the ideas that come from those in church institutions and agencies. To some extent in high school and throughout college, I had grown to appreciate the insights of faith that I received from church leaders and educators. But as I neared the end of college, I increasingly wondered how these convictions were concretely relevant to life outside institutions of the church.

The question was focused more clearly for me in the fall of 1974 when the Intercollegiate Peace Fellowship held its annual assembly at Goshen College and focused on concern for the world's hungry. During those meetings, a friend from Bethel College questioned how much the things we were saying actually spoke to the lives of people in settings other than ours as students. Here we were: unmarried, without family obligations, often living on borrowed money, with few possessions to look after, and, in most cases, not even concerning ourselves with the daily operation of a household.

I do believe that colleges are good as places to study, ask questions, and even live, but I found that some things seemed a bit hard to speak to with much integrity from an institutional setting. For instance, can one "live simply" while farming with $25,000 tractors? Is it morally responsible to feed grain to animals while much of the world is starving? Is it wrong to operate a business that necessitates patronizing corporations that make napalm and bombers? Is it wrong to pay taxes that send bombs on other people? It just doesn't make a lot of sense to dump that kind of stuff on people if we're not demonstrating some real, viable alternatives ourselves.

After college, many young people interested in faith and the work of the church would end up in one institution or another—seminary or graduate school, Mennonite Central Committee, voluntary service, or congregational ministries. But personally, I thought it somewhat awkward to speak to issues of faith with much credibility at a grassroots level from these positions of professional church work. Of course, the pastorate would seem to be the place to work on issues of faith in a concrete way. But even many pastoral models seemed to isolate and stereotype serious faith. I suppose I was just dissatisfied with mostly talking about following Jesus.

What would it look like if our identities were primarily associated with building God's kingdom as much as running our business? What if Christian nurture, service, fellowship, worship, missions, and discipleship were our fundamental objectives in being where we are? Would it affect our jobs, our businesses, our schedules, our relationships? Are there other models, any creative alternatives, for living and working that would be more conducive to serving our Lord?

I certainly don't want to diminish the value of competency, of developing skills and abilities in our occupations. These are precious tools with which to serve Christ and other people. I have chosen farming as a vocation in which to apply myself and to "do all to the glory of God." If we look to our careers, to our occupations (as wonderful as they may be), for our primary fulfillment in life, we will certainly be frustrated. Meaning and purpose are found only in Jesus as we live our lives in service to Him in the community of His redeemed people. May His grace impart to us the vision and creativity to be His people first.

GRADUATES, ALUMNI, CAREERS —

AND THE CAREER SERVICES CENTER

by J.B. Shenk, Director Career Services Center

Despite recent "scare" headlines threatening unemployment and underemployment, especially for liberal arts majors, most Goshen graduates of the 'seventies have found jobs which satisfy them. As always, their jobs have not necessarily been related to their majors; in a rapidly shifting job market, adaptability and flexibility are nearly as important as a specialty. Combined with liberal arts studies, these qualities have assured good employment for most GC graduates.

Career Services in the 'Eighties

A belief in the integration of work with other facets of life is a key element of GC's Career Services. In the next few years we want first of all to increase the number of experiences which help students to appraise their values, skills, and goals in life. Vocational interest testing will be one such experience; others will be geared to acquiring insights into personal experience through interaction with fellow students who also will be choosing careers and searching for jobs.

We will also encourage many forms of student work experience during their college years, trying to help students relate college jobs to career objectives whenever we can. The new practicum requirement and the availability of SAW (Study and Work) jobs will help us to reach this goal. Practical experience is always valuable, students have found. One GC student is developing a peace education curriculum for a Catholic elementary school. Two elementary education majors are working in Chicago this term on a variety of unique educational programs. One senior writes for a weekly urban newspaper. A business major has become involved in inner-city housing; thanks to his practicum experience, he has set for himself the career goal of becoming a housing administrator.

The Career Services wants to help students sharpen their information-gathering skills. We'll maintain and expand our library, and plan to invite some of you alums to campus to talk to students about your work. (You don't have to wait for an invitation; volunteers will be welcomed!) We will also train students to interview practitioners themselves — giving them another skill into the bargain.

We'll help students present themselves honestly and competitively when they apply for work. Underemployment — even unemployment — may be the result of simple shyness. Our information-gathering exercises, which require one-on-one conversations, help students to build communication skills and to acquire self-confidence. We'll supply them with special resources and examples of application letters, resumes, and interview styles.

Career Services will continue to function as a clearinghouse where job candidates and prospective employers can encounter one another. We will keep master lists of preferred employers for the candidates and will distribute formal credentials to prospective employers. (In many fields employers now prefer that we use only their own application blanks. They prefer to telephone references themselves.)

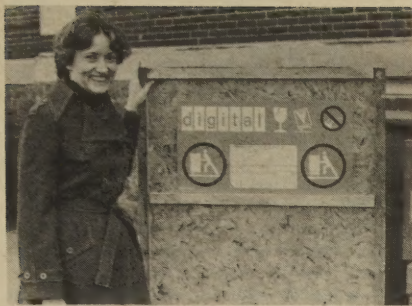

We monitor a list of periodicals and news releases to spot career trends and keep curriculum planners alert, and will continue to share the results of our research with students as well as planners. An increase in the over-65 population is one example of a trend we've been tracking. This increase will require all sort of services — in social work, recreation, and health care. Another trend is a gradual, steady drop in high-school enrollments. We advise those who have their hearts set on high school teaching to prepare for it, while realizing they may find employment outside the school. Fortunately, a secondary education program provides a good background for other kinds of work.

We'll also continue to uphold the ideal of a period of service with a church agency or program as an integral part of students' plans for life and career. Twice a year, the Mennonite agencies visit the campus to inform students of needs and opportunities.

Alums Can Help!

Although it's true that job candidates must rely on their own imagination and perseverance, all of us can use a little help sometimes. Here are some ways that alumni can help Career Services help GC job candidates:

- Send us a profile of your organization. Career Services wants to build up a file of "preferred employers" in a broad range of occupations. We have a file of school employers, but lack detailed information on occupations. If you prefer, you may use the "profile form" on the next page.
- Send us information about job openings in your organization. We'll post the information on bulletin boards and send copies to good candidates. You may use the "job opening" form, bottom of page 5.
- Send us copies of application letters and resumes that have worked for you. (If you are a personnel manager, you might want to send us "good" and "bad" examples that have impressed you one way or the other.) Please delete all names from the material you send us, unless, of course, you don't mind if we use your name.

GC'S NEW COMPUTER IMPORTANT FOR STUDENTS — FOR STUDIES NOW, JOBS LATER

How many ways have computers influenced your life today? Your grocery purchases are rung up on the cash register and are automatically recorded in a computer located elsewhere. When making your vacation plans, the travel agent has instant access to flight information for all parts of the world. You hear computer-generated music, see computer-made films, eat computer-made bread. Your credit is checked through a computer, medical research continues with computers, patterns for clothing are computer-generated, diets for special physical conditions are made up using a computer, postal routes are determined by a computer. The list could go on.

Since computers have become part of our life in so many ways, Goshen College believes that "computer literacy" is increasingly important. Employers look for graduates with some computer training, either through a specific computer course or through a course which integrates the computer with another skill or discipline.

The College has responded to this need by purchasing equipment which includes a Digital PDP 11/70 computer; two line printers (one to be used by the administration and one for student and faculty use); 11 Cathode Ray Tubes with visual output (one has graph-plotting capabilities); three hard-copy terminals (paper output); a Diablo word processor; one disk drive and one tape drive.

Faculty members are beginning to integrate the computer into their courses. The chemistry department has plans to connect GC's older, smaller computer to chemical instruments; math courses use the computer as a problem-solving tool; the nursing, psychology and sociology departments encourage student research and use the computer to test results; and the physical education department makes use of the computer for physiological tests.

Two computer courses are currently offered on campus. A committee for educational use of the computer is looking at ways in which the computer might be integrated into other existing courses and also to develop a computer curriculum which would prepare students for computer-related careers.

Purchase of the computer facilities will allow us to explore the possibility of computer use in many areas, limited only by our knowledge and imagination. It is our hope that by integrating the computer in many classes, GC students will be better prepared for the job market today and tomorrow.

Director of Computer Services

TRUE OR FALSE: A COLLEGE EDUCATION LEADS TO JOBS IN YOUR MAJOR FIELD

As part of a sociology course at GC this spring, Eloise Scrag researched the effect of their college education on subsequent career decisions of a group of GC graduates. Following are excerpt from her research paper. Eloise graduated in April and will be a first-year student in the Medical School of the University of South Dakota this fall.

For this study, a random sample of 36 people was taken from the list of 14,000 Goshen College alumni. The sample includes people of all ages, geographic locations and majors; only those receiving a BA or BS from GC were used. Of the 36 persons sampled, 24 responded. This survey attempted to collect data on each person's education and job history, and to get a feel for the factors influencing and motivating their career decisions.

This limited study did not validate the myth that many graduates are working as garbage collectors, dishwashers or other jobs unrelated to their college major! Seventy-nine percent of the alumni respondents were working in a job directly related to their major. Of the five who were not, four at one time or another had worked in their field of study for a year or more. Three of these were women who had stopped working outside the home in order to raise a family. Only one of the respondents was pursuing a career unrelated to her college degree; this was because of dissatisfaction with her choice of a major rather than lack of employment opportunity in her field.

It is important to see how the factor of education relates to other factors which influence career decisions. Alumni were asked to list in order of importance the factors involved in getting them where they are today.

Personal fulfillment and job satisfaction were mentioned most often (by 29 percent). Educational training was the next highest factor (21 percent), with family obligations third (17 percent). Also mentioned as most important were location of job, spiritual calling, and a particular job opportunity.

Another way of looking at this is to note that of all the factors which people mentioned, 71 percent cited job satisfaction somewhere in their list of priorities; 58 percent listed job location; 54 percent listed educational training and 33 percent listed family obligations. Of the 38 percent who listed salary as a factor, all but two persons put it at the bottom of their lists! Twenty percent of the respondents mentioned that the values related to Culture for Service were stressed while they were at GC and had something to do with their choice of major and career.

Conclusions drawn from the data would be oversimplified or generalized. It is hard to say, for example, how educational training affects the job satisfaction factor. It does appear that most of the GC grads surveyed have worked in their major fields of study at one time or another. If another career was pursued, it was generally because of a person's own desire to change and not because of lack of job opportunities in the field for which he or she was educated.

Sixty-three percent of the respondents had further education after Goshen College. Except in two instances, their graduate study was in the same field as their undergraduate work or in a related field.

Several of those surveyed viewed their present job as a steppingstone to other positions in their field, or were planning careers in fields completely different from their present ones. Thirty-eight percent said that they have every intention of staying with their present job; of this group, all graduated in 1966 or before. Among recent grads there was much more fluidity in career planning.

Alumni were asked to indicate all the jobs previously held; each job title, including homemaking, and the present position, counted as a job. The average was 2.6 jobs per person. Here is a breakdown tabulated by college major.

ALUMNI BULLETIN BOARD

Alumna Featured In Good Housekeeping

In April 1978 Good Housekeeping includes a Women in Action feature titled "Dr. Lydia Emery—Love Is the Best Medicine." Lydia Hershberger Emery, originally from Kalona, Iowa, graduated from the Goshen Academy in 1927 and attended GC from 1928-1930.

The article tells about Dr. Emery's practice in the small town of Yoncalla, Oregon. The 67-year old doctor is described as "active in her community, active in her church, loved and respected by both children and adults, even available for house calls in the middle of any night."

Keith Kauffmann

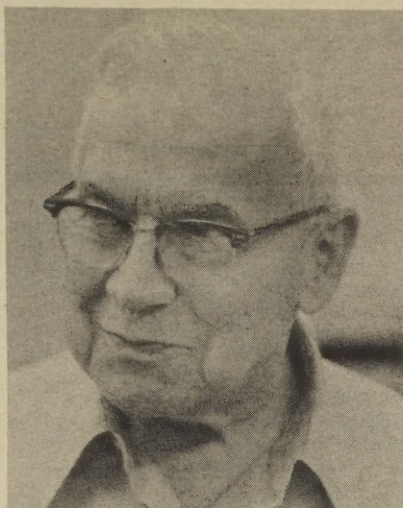

GC Grad In Corn Research

DeKalb IL — The addition of two researchers to the corn breeding division of DEKALB Ag-Research, Inc., was announced by Basil Tsotsis, vice president of corn research.

Keith Kauffmann, as manager of genetic resources at the agronomic research center in DeKalb, collects, tests and catalogues corn germplasm resources of international origin, develops corn composites for use in line development and investigates heterotic patterns in corn.

A graduate of Goshen College (Indiana) in biology, Kauffmann recently completed requirements for a Ph.D. in genetics from the University of Illinois. During study at the University, his graduate assistantship within the corn breeding program allowed four years of direct experience with corn, quantitative genetics and breeding methodology. He is a member of the American Society of Agronomy.

Kauffman resides in DeKalb with his wife Kathy and daughter.

Paul Erb, Scottsdale, PA, author of the new book, Bible Prophecy, which contains thoughtful and seasoned answers to 90 difficult questions on this controversial subject. A long-time teacher, preacher, writer, and leader among the Mennonites, Paul Erb taught English at Goshen College from 1939-46.

New Book Introduces Children To Middle East Conflict

In Journey to Jerusalem by Marian Hostetler, 12-year-old Mim Nelson's life takes on sudden excitement when her widowed mother accepts a new job.

Together they leave on a trip around the world to meet crafts people in many countries and help them find markets for their handiwork.

Illness interrupts Mim's journey at their first stop, Israel. But needing to stay behind while her mother travels on brings Mim some unexpected experiences.

Enjoying a picnic where Jesus fed 5,000 people with fish sandwiches, swimming in the Dead Sea, and seeing the fields where Bethlehem shepherds kept their sheep help make the stories of the Bible more real to Mim.

She also visits an archeological dig and has the thrill of unearthing a household object from Bible times!

More important are the people she learns to know. Mim had thought of Arabs mainly as terrorists. Now, through her friendship with Rebiha, she participates in Arab village life and learns firsthand about some of their sufferings.

Marian Hostetler's interest in the Arab-Israeli conflict began during the nine years she lived in Algeria, an Arabic-speaking country in North Africa. Traveling to Israel and the occupied territories during a Middle East study seminar added to her knowledge and increased her interest in the problems there.

Presently Marian teaches third grade at Concord West Side School, Elkhart, Indiana. She received her MS degree in elementary education from Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana and her BA from Goshen College. She has also studied at Goshen Biblical Seminary, Elkhart, Indiana.

Marian enjoys reading and painting as well as writing, and is an active member of Belmont Mennonite Church in Elkhart.

She dedicates her latest book "to all those who are hoping, praying, and working for peace and justice in the Middle East. I emphasize the Palestinian point of view because I think it is not as well known to most of us," she explains. "However, I have also tried to present fairly the Israeli viewpoint."

Journey to Jerusalem by Marian Hostetler is published by Herald Press, Scottsdale, Pennsylvania, and Kitchener, Ontario. It is available in hardcover and softcover editions at $3.95 and $2.95 respectively ($4.35 and $3.25 in Canada).

Marian Hostetler, Elkhart, Indiana, author of the new Herald Press book for junior high school students, Journey to Jerusalem.

Three "First-Ever" Area Meetings Held

In three locations far from Goshen, alumni and friends met recently for "first-time-ever" GC meetings in their area. They met March 30 in San Francisco, April 1 in San Antonio, and April in Salt Lake City.

The Utah gathering was initiated and hosted by Badawe '70 and Joy Kauffman '71 Khader and Terry and Suzanne Chittick '68 Phillips. Invitations went to the ten alumni households in that state, and four couples gathered for the Sunday afternoon fellowship at the Khader home in Salt Lake City. Hostess Joy reports that they enjoyed getting better acquainted and comparing their experiences at GC.

In San Francisco, John Nafziger '76 hosted a dinner meeting at the Far East Cafe. GC faculty member Ruth Krall, in the city for a professional meeting, spoke to the group about current campus life, especially the new Student Development Division.

Special guests at the dinner were President Emeritus Paul Mininger and his wife Mary. Paul talked about his study and work at Wright Institute in Berkeley during the past seven years, commenting on church-related higher education and a special interest of his, the "humanizing" of education.

Ruth reports that when the twenty persons present introduced themselves, they found a wide variety of occupations and experiences. The management finally put an end to the visiting when they closed the restaurant!

The Texas gathering was initiated and coordinated by Barbara Tschabold '68 Farrell and her husband Johnny. Headquarters for the meeting was the Master Hosts Inn, where Johnny is general manager and Barbara recently began working in sales, reservations, and the front office. Ruth Krall, en route home from her California meetings, met with the group.

Barbara reports: "We opened the meeting room at 3 p.m. so that alumni arriving from out of town could relax and visit. After punch and light hors d'oeuvres, Ruth Krall reported on new developments at the College in the areas of academics, student services, and building; she answered questions not only on the progress of the College but also on activities and whereabouts of faculty members particularly remembered by those attending."

"At 7 p.m. we left for the beautiful 'Paseo del Rio' (River Walk), a mile and a half of the San Antonio River bordered by lush tropical gardens, soft lights, clubs, restaurants, small shops and boutiques, to strains of Mariachi music floating across the water from outdoor patios and sidewalk cafes. Our full Mexican-style dinner was served to us by candlelight (it was a little windy and we had to keep re-lighting the candles, but it was otherwise a perfect evening). The floating river barge carried us on the winding river throughout the evening."

"Full of enchiladas, tamales, tacos, and frijoles, we climbed the steps back up to street level to meet the hotel limousine. It was delayed, and so we were treated to another local attraction — Bongo Joe, playing on his custom-tuned oil drums, accompanied by his delightful whistling and his observations on the current political scene. Bongo Joe, a familiar sight near Broadway and Alamo streets in San Antonio, never fails to draw a crowd of tourists and locals alike, and seeing him perform was an unexpected sidelight for the visiting alumni."

"We reluctantly said good-byes all around, exchanged phone numbers and addresses and planned to get together again. Some from other cities said they would consider hosting a meeting next year. Some of us were surprised to find that old classmates were living not too far away (by Texas standards, anyway!). And those of us who had married Texans had fun getting our spouses together with other GCers."

ALUMNI SAID IT

The following is from a letter written by Som Pliansaneh to his friends from his GC days, the Roman Gingerichs. Som asked the Gingerichs to share this with Bulletin readers.

The GC Bulletin makes me homesick for Goshen and my friends there. I am thinking of doing something that is useful to GC . . . I can make myself available to GC alumni who ever want to go to Bangkok, Thailand. I can assist them in planning for a visit, what places to go, and they are welcome to stay at my place or I can guide them if they prefer to stay at a hotel.

If any alumni have a trip or business in Bangkok, they can contact me at Hanover Insurance Company, 181 Suriwongse Road AIA Boulevard, phone 233-2900 extension 471, or write to Box 846, Bangkok, Thailand. Som Pliansaneh '71.

After all these years since 1935, when I was a freshman in Kulp Hall, the motto of the college means more than ever to me: Culture for Service. Gladys L. Hersherberger '49 Cone

I am happy to be able to share in the GC '73 Phonothon. Kevin H. really didn't need a sales pitch to "sell" me. I hope the Phonothon was successful because schools like GC are hard to come by in this sorry world today. John E. Bender '30.

Richard A. Kauffman '68 reports on the April 21-23 Laurelville Weekend with Professor Mary K. Oyer: We sang from The Mennonite Hymnal and the Harmonia Sacra. And of course Mary gave us a fine mini-course in hymnology. Saturday afternoon we went to Fallingwater, the Frank Lloyd Wright house. The weekend group was small enough to be intimate, yet we had enough voices, with good balance, to make it a worthwhile musical experience. We had almost 60 people for the Saturday evening banquet; Mary spoke on Arican music. Southwestern Pennsylvania alumni were happy to host these weekend events.

Joe Buzzard '30, recently moved to Goshen, Ind., visits with Morris Mast '62, State College, Pa. Morris is the new chairperson of the Southwestern Pennsylvania alumni chapter.

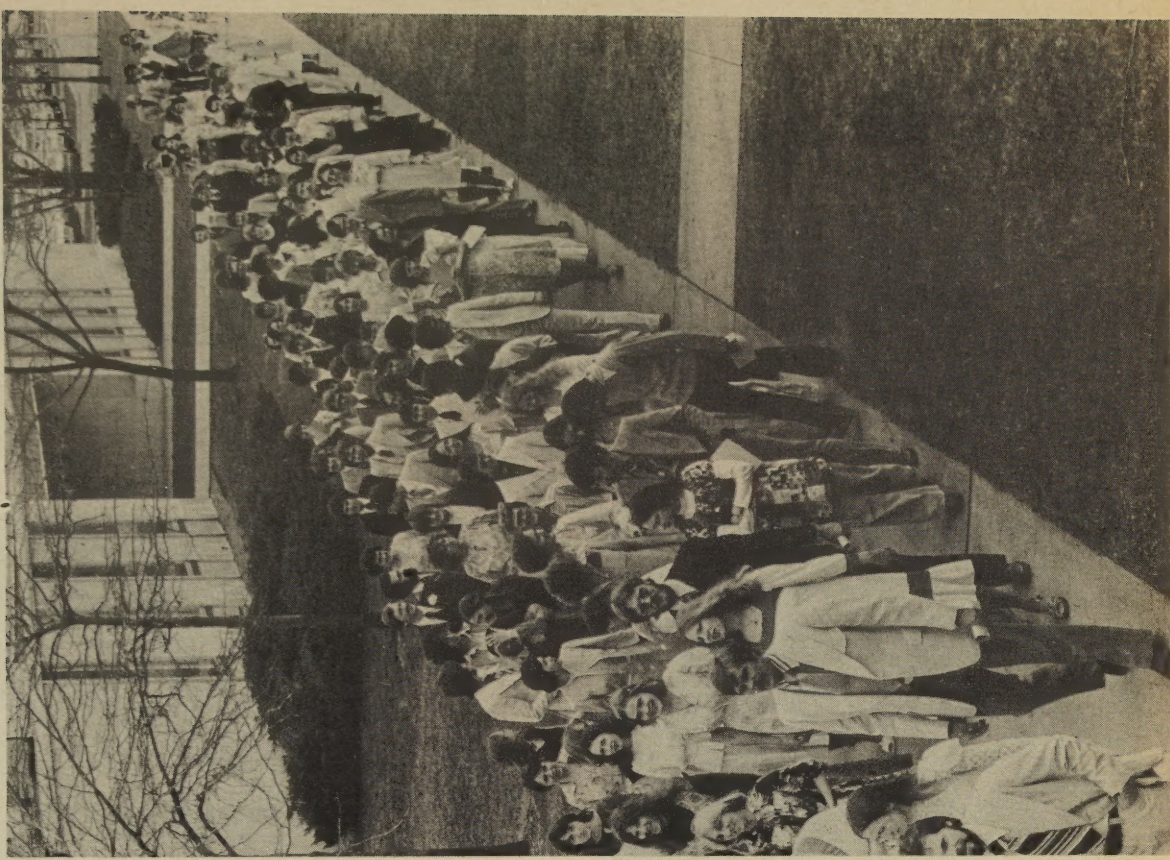

These grads' expressions reflect many emotions — joy, relief, celebration, meditation. Is there life after college?

Strong in Mission: The Church and its Colleges

by John Mosemann

"We have a defined constituency. We have roots." These are good words, right words, spoken by a faculty member in a recent consultation. Goshen College is deeply rooted in the Mennonite Church. That is where we belong. Throughout its history, the College has maintained this as its primary loyalty. We constantly remind ourselves of our church orientation and would not wish for a different one. But "a church-related college" needs "a college-related church!"

These two realities depend so much upon each other. The College is the offspring and servant of the Church. The Church is the owner and guarantor of the College. Understandings need to be shared. Mutual expectations must be spelled out. Acceptable guidelines need to be recognized so that each can help shape and serve the goals of each. This should not be difficult since "our mission is one".

The following analysis tries to sketch out roles and expectations. The College is eager to maintain clear awareness of its Church orientation and the obligations of that relationship. The Church needs to be equally sensitive to what it means to sponsor higher education. The perceptions need to be mutually supportive and reinforcing.

A CHURCH-RELATED COLLEGE

1. Affirms its origins in the Church and acknowledges mutual trust and indebtedness
2. Understands the nature and mission of the Church and functions as an integral element of the Church's life
3. Incorporates the unique ethos of the Church in campus life and programs
4. Bases its educational programs on deliberate Christian assumptions
5. Remains sensitive to the Church as it is and where it is
6. Resources the Church in developing life planning materials for use among junior and senior high youth
7. Recognizes the potential for positive influence in the Church through its students and graduates
8. Considers its students a trust from the Church to train for citizenship in the Kingdom
9. Models Christian values for youth who search for imitable patterns and life-styles
10. Attempts to lead youth into a Christian understanding of life, the world, and the Church, honoring the principle of voluntarism
11. Emphasizes Christian vocation as determining occupational and professional goals
12. Maintains a clear sense of mission in all its institutional relationships
13. Interprets the Christian Faith in terms of its Biblical origins and our Anabaptist heritage
14. Responds to the Church's needs for leadership and training in new areas
15. Anticipates continuing dialogue with its Church constituency on the College's faithfulness and the Church's expectations

A COLLEGE-RELATED CHURCH

1. Affirms the Church's rationale for its Colleges
2. Affirms its belief in learning as a handmaiden of the Church's task
3. Expects the College to give leadership in deepening our understandings, broadening our learnings, and pioneering for prophetic witness
4. Involves its junior and senior high school students in life-planning awareness and preparation for Christian vocations
5. Provides its youth with essential informational and counseling services for educational and vocational decisions
6. Disposes its youth to give first priority to Church Colleges whenever higher education is anticipated or indicated
7. Regards the College as the Church's servant at the undergraduate level for training in Kingdom living
8. Considers youth decisions to enter a Church College as deserving a commission from, and covenant with, the Congregation
9. Maintains sensitive and supportive relations with students during their college years
10. Builds strong financial and counseling structures for the support of the College
11. Accepts the Church's share of the approved College budget
12. Maintains a free spirit of dialogue and counsel with the College in all matters of concern and interest

From The Northeast Corner

From this Ad Building basement window, I see a network of ivy roots — leaves long blown in the autumn wind — clutching and claiming space on Science Building bricks.

Roots. An apt reminder of purpose as the nitty-gritty of daily work goes on in the alumni office. To what end, all this mailing, filing, planning, recording? Nourishing our roots is part of the reason.

For each of us alumni, Goshen College is part of our "root system." Affirming our roots is "in" currently, but many of us knew before the TV series that accepting and connecting with our personal history is an important antidote to future shock. The GC alumni network, keeping in touch with people and experiences in our past, helps to nourish our root system.

An alumnus writes, "I've just moved to Hyde Park, New York. Are there any GC alums in this area?"

In southern Africa, I visit long into the night with an alumnus. Campus news, and reflecting on student days there, seems a welcome oasis in the hard work of living as a sensitive helper in a foreign culture.

After alumni weekend, an alumnus from a far state writes, "it was wonderful, visiting and re-living the warmth of GC fellowship."

Alumni editions of GC Bulletin attempt to nourish the root system. In this issue, we focus on alumni in New York City and those returning to campus for alumni weekend.

Some alumni have suggested that a directory, with alums listed geographically, would be a welcome service. Would you find such a directory useful? Let the alumni office know. Part of our purpose is to help you keep in touch. We welcome your suggestions.

CBS NEWSMAN TALKS

Fred Graham, Law Correspondent with CBS News, presented the first of the Goshen College Lectures in Public Affairs Sept. 28. The lecture was entitled "The Law Beat — Things Legal and Illegal in Washington." Graham's lively and informative talk focused mainly on the relationship between the government and the press. The Lectureship in Public Affairs was established this fall by the generosity of a Goshen attorney who wishes to remain anonymous.

A PUBLICATION TO PONDER

Stanley Grove, associate professor of biology, collaborated in the publication of an article in Experimental Mytology on protoplasmic changes during zoospore encystment and cyst germination in Pythium aphanideimotum.

UMBLE CENTER DEDICATED

Faculty, students, and friends celebrated the completion of the new John S. Uumble Center with a dedication Nov. 4. Participants included Clarence and Mae Imhoff, Roanoke, IL, major donors; President J. Lawrence Burkholder; Weldon Pries, Cambridge, MA, architect; Charles Ainlay, Goshen, Chairman of the President's Advisory Board; Roy Uumble, director of dramatic arts; Lyle and Erma Yost, Hesston, KS, major donors; Mary Eleanor Bender, professor of French; Charles Gautsche, Archbold, OH, chairman of the Board of Overseers; Doyle Preheim, professor of music; and the College Brass Quintet.

The Center is a multi-purpose theatre for drama, music, lectures, classes, and worship. The two-story building, costing $1.6 million and built during the past two years, will seat up to 450 campus, church, and community people. It is named for the late John S. Uumble. Uumble served as GC professor of speech and English from 1925 to 1952 and was the father of Roy Uumble.

ANCIENT MANUSCRIPTS EXHIBITED

Dennis MacDonald, GC religion professor, secured a set of early Coptic manuscripts for display at the College in mid-October. The manuscripts, religious texts of early ascetic Christians deemed heretical by the Church Fathers, were found along with other documents and artifacts in Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1946. The manuscripts did not appear in any modern language until they were published in English at the end of 1977. The collection is very valuable in the interpretation of early Christianity.

SEMINARY BUILDING BECOMING NEWCOMER CENTER

A gift to Goshen College from Franklin and Maxine Newcomer, LaGrange, IN, is being used for extensive renovation of the Old Seminary Building. The renovated building will house the Center for Discipleship, the Business, Religion, and English Departments, and various classrooms. It will also serve as a facility for conferences and classes in continuing education. The Center for Discipleship, headed by C. Norman Kraus, will be the chief beneficiary of the renovation. Mr. and Mrs. Newcomer are members of the Shore Mennonite Church, LaGrange, and are committed Christians with a deep concern for Christian leadership training.

GC GETS FOUR NEW FACULTY

Sylvia Dyson, Jyl Hershberger Neufeld, Rebecca Yoder, and Paul Keim have joined the GC faculty in either teaching or administrative positions. Sylvia, from Oakland, CA, is director of the Cross-Cultural Relations Center. Jyl, a 1977 GC Grad, teaches in the Nursing Department. She is originally from Friend, NE. Rebecca, an instructor in Spanish, is an Elkhart native who graduated from GC in 1974. Paul, also from Elkhart, was hired as resident assistant of High Park Dormitory. He attended GC 1973-77, and is completing his student teaching this fall.

Lecture In A Bike Helmet?

GC alumni have been known to do strange things, but returning to campus to lecture in a bicycle helmet? Chester Raber '50 did just that — appeared in full bicycle gear, and brought his bike as well. The occasion was a kick-off address for a series of events on career planning. Intended for both GC students and high school students visiting campus, the career emphasis was scheduled for alumni weekend so that visiting alumni could talk to students about their career experience. In Raber's speech, "Career Reflections — If I Had It To Do All Over Again," he compared vocational planning to planning and experiencing a bike hike. Chet and his wife Gerry (Landis '54) are avid bikers. Photo by Conrad Mast.

GC ALUMNI THRIVE IN THE BIG APPLE

Alumni Director Alice M. Roth

It's a long distance from Goshen College Ever Singing to The Big Apple [as New Yorkers affectionately call their city]. Alumni there appear to be not only alive and kicking, but thriving, finding each other, and engaged in a wide variety of pursuits. In October, I spent two days visiting alumni and a weekend with GC art professor Abner Hershberger and his alumni gallery tour.

Some Go To Live ...

Ask what brings GC alums to New York City and it boils down to "work" and "study." Beyond that is a wide variety of interests and outlooks.

Sylvia Horst '76, in the cover photo at the entrance to Menno House, became interested in city life when she worked at a summer camp operated by Mennonite churches of the city. Now Sylvia is employed in the foster care preventive unit of Angel Guardian Home, a Catholic child care agency.

Menno House, at 314 E. 19th Street, is a lively center — residence for 14 people, a place to drop in for many others. At an informal gathering there, I learned from Ruth Ann Stauffer '71 what it feels like to be the only female attorney in a firm of 15 lawyers; Verlin Garber '57 described the problems behind the Guild of Musical Artists' strike against the Metropolitan Opera; and Dave Bishop '69 attempted to explain (for us lay people) his postdoctoral genetics research at Mt. Sinai School of Medicine. Other conversation ranged from the possibility of renovating Hattle Hotel in downtown Goshen to enforcement of New York City's clean-up-after-your-dog laws to the upcoming first meeting of the Metropolitan Area Mennonite and Anabaptist Studies Association.

Coordinating Menno House activity is Myrna Burkholder '63. A nine-year veteran of the city, Myrna is employed by the student services offices of Mennonite Board of Missions and Eastern Mission Board.

Tom Sutter '73 is a Menno House resident while studying for a master's degree in public health at Columbia University. He also works as a physician's assistant at the Columbia health clinic.

A hundred blocks north of Menno House, three GC-related men staff important desks at the Church World Service offices. Dwight Swartzendruber, father of recent GC grads Dan and Fred, is responsible for CWS affairs in Central America. Kirk Alliman '65 holds a parallel position, director for Southeast Asia, and James Styer '69 is working on a special project related to CWS and National Council of Churches financial systems.

When I visited, Kirk was making last-minute preparations for a six-week trip to Southeastern Asia. A priority agenda for the trip is searching out the unique priority projects for CWS involvement. In places like Bangladesh, where there are 136 agencies working, that is not simple.

Kirk came to his present job last July, after CWS service in four other countries. CWS and the National Council Missions Division are merging; Kirk feels that his being chosen for this position is directly related to the Mennonite reputation for combining missions and service. "Since I've been a kid, when you did one, you were doing the other. The same was true in MYF, and was reinforced at GC."

Of his Ph.D. in early American legal and economic history, Kirk says "While grad school was not specific preparation for this, I wouldn't do it differently. The profs that my major gave me entree to the friends in the discipline — these were important to me."

Jim Styer's present situation follows a GC phys ed major, teaching in Woodstock, India, a master's degree from the American Graduate School of International Management in Phoenix, and two years with CWS in Guatemala. He was so convinced of the GC philosophy that everyone should develop physical skills, that he became less interested in coaching competitive high school sports. Jim thinks that Humane Studies courses are important, because it's hard to know in college exactly what work one might do later; a broad background allows options.

In his present job, Jim is working with a consulting firm to design a new financial management information system for CWS and the National Council. The design will include a series of reports which will provide information to facilitate more effective monitoring and control of these agencies' programs.

Jim and his wife Beth Brenneman '71 enjoy living with their two small children in New York. They get along without a car, and "where we live, it's clean and safe."

Susan Eberscle '77 moved to New York this summer; in this photograph she is at work at the front desk of the Whitney Museum. Her husband John Bauman '72 is pastor of Glad Tidings Mennonite Church.

Most of the nine years that Jim Hochstetler '69 has been in the city, he worked in hospital administration. Currently he is working as a waiter at the Bees' Knees Restaurant and is exploring vocational options for the future. Jim has helped make arrangements for the two alumni art week-ends. This photo was taken as he prepared dinner in his apartment for a dozen GC alumni and friends.

RAIN, REMINISCING MARK ALUMNI WEEKEND

Rain and wind brought down the brilliant maple leaves, but they did not dampen the spirits of GC alumni who gathered for reunions and other activity on Alumni Weekend, October 13-15.

Weekend highlights are noted in photographs in this issue of the Bulletin — the Nursing Division celebration (cover photo); the visit to campus of distinguished alumnus Adolfo Comba '48 and the kindergarten's celebration of 20 years in its present location (photographs on this page); the ten reunion gatherings recorded in photographs on the following pages.

Next year's Alumni Weekend will again fall on the second Saturday in October, beginning Friday, October 12, and continuing through Saturday the 13th, 1979. Mark your calendar now, especially if your college class year ends in 4 or 9.

In addition to attending his 30th-year reunion, Adolfo Comba '48 [left] spoke in campus convocation, to a community group and to an alumni group during Alumni Weekend. IOWA ALUMNI MEET

GC alumni and friends in Southeastern Iowa met October 23 for a dinner meeting at Kalonial House in Kalona, Iowa. Robert Birkey '69, assistant professor of social work at GC, spoke and showed the new SST film. He and John Bixler '52 entertained the group with guitar duets. John and Rebecca Troyer '51 Bixler hosted the Kalona meeting.

PRESIDENT TO MEET ALUMNI GROUPS IN SOUTH

President J. Lawrence Burkholder will meet GC alumni, parents and friends in Puerto Rico, Florida and Georgia in early 1979.

Alumni hosts for a January 5 meeting in Aibonito, Puerto Rico will be Ronald '52 and Esther Rose Buckwalter '52 Graber.

In Sarasota, Florida, Fred '44 and Dolce Bell '50 Swartzendruber will coordinate plans for a dinner meeting on Tuesday evening, January 9. President and Mrs. Burkholder will meet with alumni in the Atlanta, Georgia area on Wednesday evening, January 10; this event will be hosted by Harold '42 and Avis Hostetler '44 King.

SMITH BROTHERS REMINISCES ABOUT 'THEN' AND COMMENT ON 'NOW'

During a pause in the festivities accompanying the Old Timers Luncheon, Newsletter reporter Deb Hostetler talked with some stars of the Class of 1928 — Willard, Tilman, and Milton Smith. With Verna Smith, Willard's wife, and Dorothy Smith Shank (Academy '28), the Smiths made an impressive party at the luncheon.

From a 50-year perspective, the brothers shared their observations about then and now: "Students aren't that much different, except that they've had broader contacts than we had 50 years ago. Most of us came from farms — they used to call us hayseeds. We didn't have the cultural breadth in our homes, the music and the travel.

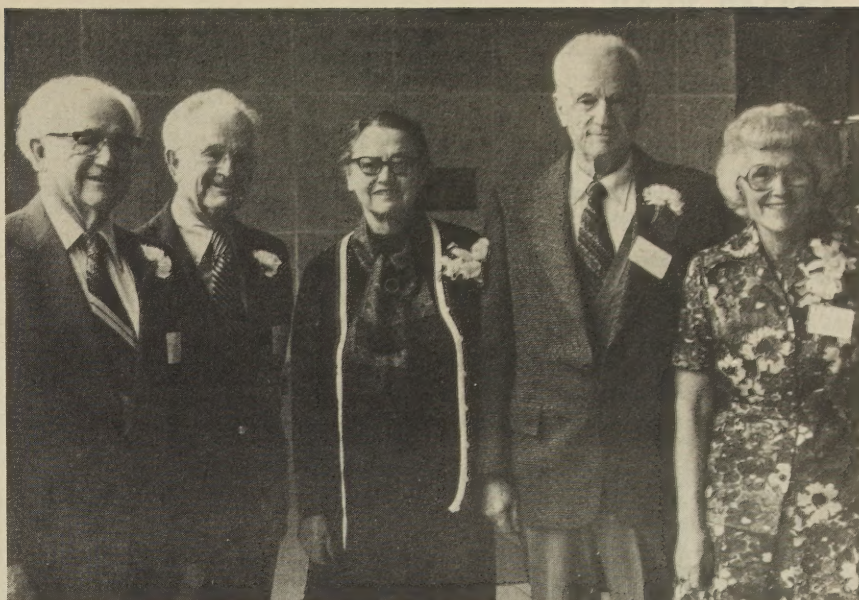

"Another thing — college work was not nearly on as high a plane as it is now. Textbooks were not as difficult. Goshen was a high-quality college, to be sure, but the level of work and the expectations were not nearly as high. There just wasn't as much to know."

Such an admission might come as a shock to those who expect a conventional eulogy of the "good old days," but the Smith brothers are not conventional. They believe they had "one big advantage from a social standpoint: we sat around tables at dinner, family style. We had a host and a hostess at each table. Dining was an occasion, and we wore dress jackets for dinner."

Asked if they thought there was more dating "back then," Tilman replied, "Well, let me put it this way. You didn't date with the expectation that it would be permanent. You'd often date many different people."

"You were always looking," added Milton.

Team sports brought out some more differences which developed over the years. "There was no interscholastic competition at that time," Tilman observed. "Everything was intramural. We played a lot of basketball, a lot of baseball, and many more people were involved then than today. Every class had a basketball team; even the literary societies had teams. There was a lot of competition, but certainly not on the level of competence (students enjoy) today."

On the subject of collegiate pranks, the Smith brothers recalled snipe hunting at Hesston College, where they would "take freshmen out in the woods and tell them to hold the bag — you know how it goes." Students also were sent to town for left-handed monkey wrenches; store clerks participated in the fun by saying, "We don't have any here — why don't you try next door?"

Students used to assume more active roles in construction and maintenance work at the College, Milton recollected. "If we needed something and knew the College couldn't afford it, we went out and worked at it together; even the faculty helped. The old gym — the students built that."

Tilman remarked that students' spirits "are just as good as they used to be, as you can tell from some of the things that were done last winter during the big snow — service provided by students who reached out to the community."

"They're better than they used to be," said

Willard. "I think that students today are probably a little less materialistic than we. More interested in peace, anti-war. The Church has done better teaching recently."

What was the most important legacy of their days as GC students? "The influence of people, faculty and students," said Milton, "that provided the roots, gave me the encouragement to go on, and made me whatever success I have been."

"The high priority on spiritual values" exerted the most influence on Tilman. "This spirituality wasn't emphasized in isolation," he said, "the emphasis was on the whole person, the total person, the fact that you can't separate the spiritual from the rest of life. It's a balanced sort of package at GC."

BUMBLE BEE TO GC A Long Trip for A Big Rock

After the October 14 Old Timers Luncheon, C. J. Gerber '17, of Wakarusa, Indiana, and Elmer Lehman '16, of Goshen, recounted the tale of the piece of petrified forest that found its way to GC — thanks to their efforts back in 1920.

Driving through the petrified forest, they spotted some small (several hundred pounds) rocks of particular beauty, and decided that one should go to the GC Science Building. Heaving it on to the running board of their Model T, they carried it into Bumble Bee, Arizona, for crating and shipping.

Before the rock could journey to Goshen, someone had to give permission for its removal from the forest. "I should put you in jail," was the governor's reply to their request. Several letters to Washington met with firm "no". (The rock rested in Bumble Bee as C. J. and Elmer returned to their homes.) Finally a junior official gave permission; Elmer thinks he was tired of hearing from them.

Back in Indiana, the eager alumni could find no stone cutter with equipment adequate to polish this hard a stone, or even a drill that would make holes to fix a small plate to the rock. The men can't remember how they managed to get the rock to third floor of Science Building, "but it must have been some job." And there the rock rests today — GC's share of the petrified forest.

GC SCIENCE MAJORS — DOES THIS LOOK FAMILIAR?

If you were a science major at Goshen college, you probably walked past this rock — actually, a petrified stone — many times. Chances are, you never knew, or even wondered, where it came from or how it got to the third floor of the Science Building. Photo by Deb Hostetler.

25- AND 50- YEAR CLASSES CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARIES

Part of Alumni Weekend activities were special events for the Classes of 1928, celebrating their golden anniversary, and for the Class of 1953, celebrating its 25-year anniversary.

Members of the Goshen Academy and College Classes of 1928 were guests of President and Mrs. Burkholder at the annual Old Timers luncheon. Also invited were alumni of more than 50 years ago. The sixty persons who gathered in the church chapel fellowship rooms for the lunch enjoyed reminiscing, and savored especially the stories told by the three Smith brothers who graduated in the Class of '28 (story on page 5).

Members of the 25-year class were headquartered again this year at the Goshen Holiday Inn. Weekend events for the Class of '53 began with an open house Friday evening at the home of class members Russel and Marjorie Schertz Liechty. Class president Stanley Strycker hosted the Saturday noon lunch at the Holiday Inn. In addition to introducing members and their families, the class sponsor, former GC faculty member Karl Massanari, spoke to the group, telling about his work as director of the Clearinghouse on Teacher Education in Washington, D.C.

When the class met again Sunday morning, President Burkholder shared with them some of his reflections on the present state of the Mennonite Church. Thoughtful discussion followed. One class member wrote later, "Not being presently involved with the Mennonite Church, we found Burkholder's talks most informative and giving reason for concern." (Burkholder also spoke at the Saturday alumni banquet.) Another member of the Class of '53 commented that "Burkholder's talk helps me understand some of the past movements in our church which have brought us where we are now. The present situation is clearer in light of his analysis of the past." Abram Hostetter led this session, which concluded with a brunch.

Delbert Detwiler and Mary Ann Stemen Ryman helped plan and coordinate the Class of '53 weekend.

Some Couldn't Come, Wrote Letters Instead

Some reunion class members who could not return to campus wrote letters to their classmates. Excerpts from these letters will be included in News Notes in the next issue of the Bulletin.

Is Your Employer Here?

If you can find your employer on this list, you can double your gift to Goshen College.

Yes, if you work for one of the firms listed below, the value of your gift to GC can be doubled. Here's how it works: Tell the appropriate person at your firm (usually in the personnel or community relations office) that you plan to contribute to GC, and that you would like to have the gift matched under their plan. Arrangements will then be made — usually through a simple form which you send along with your gift — and the firm's gift will follow.

Sound easy? It is. Last year more than 700 companies contributed more than $17,000,000 to 1,300 colleges and universities through matching gift programs. Generally, the program of a parent company will apply to its divisions, subsidiaries, and affiliated companies. Every company listed below will match to four-year colleges.

To assist you in identifying characteristics of your company program, these codes are used on the following list:

- 1 — graduate and professional schools eligible
- 2 — junior colleges eligible
- 3 — community colleges eligible
- 4 — seminaries eligible
- ALL — all of the above eligible
- PR — restricted to private institutions

LIM — limited to specified institutions

SP — will match spouse's gift also

A — alumni status or attendance required

* — may match greater than one-to-one

Companies listed in italics have been added to this list in the past year.

If Your Employer Is NOT On This List*

If your employer is not on this list, you might send this page to your personnel office and ask that the firm consider a matching gift plan. Many of these plans were started because alumni in a firm requested it. Companies who match gifts will usually send information about their plan to other companies.

ALUMNI BULLETIN BOARD

HERALD PRESS PUBLISHES GOSHEN ALUMNI

The works of five Goshen alumni and faculty have recently rolled off the Herald Press, on topics ranging from sex to social justice.

In Christian Mission and Social Justice Samuel Escobar and John Driver '50 examine the relationship between the Christian message and social and economic conditions in Latin America. Driver, who has worked in Puerto Rico and Uruguay under the Mennonite Board of Missions, is currently helping to establish a Mennonite presence in Spain.

J. Daniel Hess, GC Professor of Communication

J. Daniel Hess, professor of communication, prods us to be "whole persons in a fragmented world," and warns against careless compromise of conviction as he explores the Christian virtues of honesty and trustworthiness in Integrity: Let Your Yea Be Yea. Hess originally presented this material at various Mennonite colleges, including GC, as part of the Conrad Grebel Lectureship Series, in 1976-77.

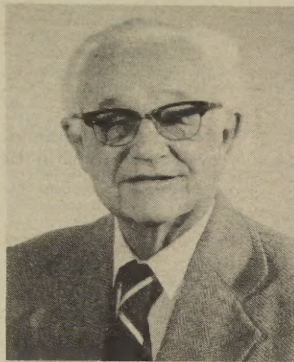

The Writing of Pilgram Marpeck is now available in English translation thanks to the efforts of William Klassen '52 and Walter Klaassen. In addition to Marpeck's writings, the book includes an essay on his life and thought, introductory remarks to each of the documents, a fold-out map of the region in which Marpeck lived and photographs from Jan Gleysteen's Anabaptist Heritage Collection, all for only $24.95. Klassen is head of the department of religion at the University of Manitoba.

H. Clair Amstutz '33, GC Professor Emeritus of Biology

"Out of faith that principles are rooted in the eternal rises hope — and the courage to love," proclaims former college physician H. Clair Amstutz '33 in his latest book, Marriage in Today's World. Amstutz combines insights from literature, psychology, sociology, human physiology, and Christian thought to defend monogamous marriage in this attractive paperback available at drugstores everywhere.

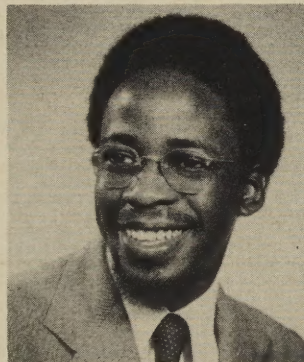

Confronting head-on the long neglected topic of Boards: Purposes, Organizations, and Procedures, Tilman R. Smith's '33 new booklet will be welcomed by bureaucratic institutions of all sorts. Writing with the clarity and wisdom of one who is himself no stranger to the board table, Smith hopes to assist groups both inside and outside the church in using proper procedures to make good decisions based on consensus.

Tilman Smith '28

REVEREND EDDIE L. ROBINSON NEW EDITOR OF FACE TO FACE

The Rev. Eddie L. Robinson '75 was recently appointed editor of the United Methodist youth publication FACE TO FACE. FACE TO FACE is edited in the department of youth publications, a part of the Curriculum Resources Committee of the Board of Discipleship of The United Methodist Church.

Rev. Eddie L. Robinson

A native of Chicago, Mr. Robinson has been pastor of Christ United Methodist Church since June, 1976. At Christ Church and other churches in the Chicago area, Mr. Robinson gained extensive experience in youth ministry. After graduating from Goshen, he received his M. Div. degree from Garrett-Evangelical Theological Seminary in Evanston, IL, in 1977.

FLOYD A. METZ '56 NAMED EXECUTIVE OF THE YEAR IN DETROIT

The United Community Services (UCS) of metropolitan Detroit has named Floyd A. Metz '56, current executive director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters Inc., "Executive-of-the-Year." Metz was recognized for his ability to run a "fiscally responsible and highly effective social service operation," according to UCS.

Since he was appointed to unite and direct four separate Big Brother/Big Sister agencies in 1974, their caseloads have jumped by 25 percent — without an increase in total staff. The operating budget has risen by only 10 percent.

Floyd A. Metz

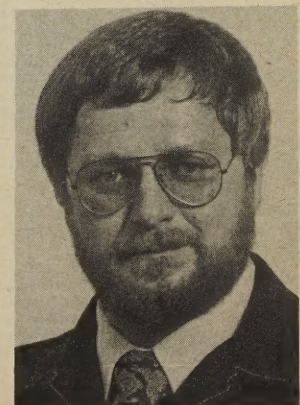

Metz's contributions to the national Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program was also cited. The Detroit agency was named the "best in the nation" by the founder of Big Brothers. Metz has been selected to prepare a national study of the effectiveness of Big Brother/Big Sister Programs.

EAST EUROPEAN QUARTERLY PUBLISHES ALUM MONOGRAPH

John M. Klassen '66, and assistant professor of history at Divinity Western College, Canada, has just brought out his book, The Nobility and the Making of the Hussite Revolution. Drawing on hitherto unanalyzed Episcopal registers, his book represents the first major study, in any language, of the role of the nobility in the Hussite Movement. It also provides valuable information on the constitutional development of the Kingdom of Bohemia and on the implementation of canon law in central Europe.

RODNEY HERNLEY RECEIVES DISTINGUISHED STATE SERVICE AWARD FOR COLORADO

Rod Hernley '66 has been chosen the 1978 recipient of the Distinguished State Service Award for the state of Colorado. Rod received a letter from Governor Richard D. Lamm of Colorado congratulating him on the achievement. The letter stated, in part, "Your work within the Department of Personnel has been outstanding. The improvements made in the personnel management information system have turned an ineffective system into a most effective part of the Department."

Rodney Hernley

Governor Lamm also commended Hernley for his involvement in civic groups. His present commitments include a term as president of the Rocky Mountain Handicapped Sports Association; part-time teacher and chairman of the Advisory Council for the Audio Visual Program at Red Rocks Community College; member of the Board of Directors, National Handicapped Sports and Recreation Association; founding Board Member of the Colorado League of Handicapped Voters; member of the Governor's Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped; and other related non-profit organizational affiliations.

Rod was hired by the Colorado Department of Personnel in February of 1972 to participate in the statewide classification study then in progress. He was later asked to join the regular staff of the Department, in which he presently heads the Data Processing and Personnel Records Unit.

Harley King, the author of a book of Haiku (see August Newsletter) has begun printing note-cards which combine Haiku and illustrations. One of the cards is illustrated above. If you wish to order cards, please write to Harley King at 1116 Broadmoor, Apt. 2, Champaign, IL 61820.

COMMITMENT TO CULTURE

Throughout its history, Goshen College has been committed to the advancement of culture.

Through such forms as art, literature, forensics, music and drama, the lives of many faculty, students and friends of the College have been enriched. The College motto, "Culture for Service," adopted in 1904 during the first year of its founding, expresses the view that culture is the essence of the liberal arts and that service is the raison d'être of Christianity.

To the extent that culture is dedicated to service, culture is delivered from its exploitative tendencies; and to the extent that service is refined by culture, service is relieved of its cruder manifestations. For just as the educated slaves became the instructors of Greek masters and thereby humanized antiquity, and just as Christian martyrs became witnesses to rulers and thereby "saved" the Roman civilization, so Goshen College attempts to embody the wisdom and beauty of culture and the grace and self-giving of Christianity for the good of us all.

In this Bulletin Goshen College announces the completion of the John S. Umble Center, a building severely needed and fondly imagined. After many years, a dream has come true—a dream of a multi-purpose building that would serve as a theater in which dramatic expression would suffer no limits, a lecture hall accommodating large assemblies, and a concert hall with perfect acoustics. Its ample stage, its towering loft, its mechanical rigging, its sophisticated lighting, its spacious workshop, and its beautiful "green room" leave nothing essential to be desired.

The John S. Umble Center is a response to growing interest in drama as a form of communication. The religious constituency of Goshen College, in particular, is discovering the power of drama as a means by which the truth may be expressed and new ideas may be explored. The significance of religious drama may be indicated by the fact that Jesus used the story (parable) as one of the ways to communicate his message.

The principal criterion for appreciating the Umble Center may well be its functional use of space. It was designed to meet the practical needs of a liberal arts setting. However, the Umble Center also represents a commitment in architecture to art. It is truly a beautiful building. Its beauty, however, is not overpowering but suggests humble strength, modest understatement and authentic witness.

The Umble Center is intended for everyone—students, faculty, staff and friends in the Goshen-Elkhart community.

GOSHEN COLLEGE AND THE PERFORMING ARTS: THE HISTORY BEHIND THE JOHN S. UMBLE CENTER

by Debra Hostetler

Aurora, Adelphian, Avon, and Vesperian — the names of these all-but-forgotten literary societies once aroused fierce loyalties and strong competition among students at Goshen College. The societies sponsored social events such as the Valentine Tea and the Fall Outing, and worked to improve the campus by purchasing the Eighth Street Arch and the fountain in front of the Administration Building.

Drama Center (Assembly Hall platform), ca. 1905. The man behind the table is Jonathan S. Yoder, later Goshen city judge. To his right, on the chair, is C. B. Blosser, dean of the College from 1919-21 and science professor from 1910-22, 1933-34.

As many will remember, however, the main purpose of the literaries was not socializing, improving the appearance of the campus, or winning intramural sports competitions, but training students in the expressive arts. Their bi-weekly programs included music, oratory, recitation of poetry, debate, book reviews, choric readings and cross-cultural presentations. In short, the artistic traditions of music and speech at GC can trace their roots back to these performances.

After a long period of vigor which lasted into the 30's and 40's, the institutionalized literary societies gradually lost popularity and influence. Many more specialized groups now exist, and the names of Goshen College Players, Artists' Series, Peace Oratorical Contest, Jazz Band, Orchestra, Chorale, and Chamber Choir suggest the richness and diversity of the current performance scene at Goshen. Each of these organizations has its own particular biography.

From the opening years of the Elkhart Institute, students have enjoyed group singing. The Philharmonic Society, sometimes called the Oratorio Society, was the first such group. A. B. Kolb, a part-time instructor of music at the Institute, directed the chorus and tried to give the singers thorough training in sacred music.

Lighter music was the strength of the Men's and Women's Glee Clubs, which were organized in 1914 and 1916 respectively. The A Capella Chorus, which replaced the Glee Clubs, performed varieties of religious music.

In the '20's, '30's and '40's, quartets were a popular form of musical expression. Men's, women's and occasionally mixed quartets would perform on campus and often toured as part of gospel teams. Many named themselves ("The Rambler Concert Company," "The Collegians," etc.) and enjoyed performing in matched outfits.

In more recent years, larger groups such as the Motet Singers, Collegiate Chorus, Chorale and Chamber Choir have grown more prominent.

A lighter moment for the Girl's Glee Club—circa 1917 or 1918.

Choirs including community members as well as college students have long been popular, and usually center around the performance of a single oratorio or requiem. The favorite is, of course, Handel's Messiah. Before the Union or the Church-Chapel was built, community choirs often performed in the Old Gymnasium, a barn-shaped structure funded and built by GC students during the mid-20's.

The construction of the Union Auditorium in 1950 and the Church-Chapel in 1960 greatly expanded the musical potential of the campus. The most significant recent addition to the campus was the installation of the pipe organ in 1970.

Along with choral events, the Lecture-Music Series has always drawn large audiences to the campus. The Series began in 1905-6, but the College imported talent even before then.

Willard Smith, chairman of the Lecture-Music Committee from 1937-1960, comments, "We always operated on the philosophy that if you get the talent and tell people about it, they'll support your programs. The college and community people have certainly flocked to ours." With Carl Sandberg and Marian Anderson on the bill for a single year (1953) when season tickets in Section A sold for $5.40, one can certainly see why.

Unfortunately, such rosy, easy days are gone, probably forever. In recent years performers fees have skyrocketed: Horowitz charges $30,000 for a single performance, and he represents the rule, not the exception among big-name performers. In spite of problems, Goshen College continues to supply fine musicians and lecturers for interested audiences.

Finding quality facilities for large gatherings has presented a problem. Before the Union was finished (1950), the College often rented Goshen High School's auditorium for their visiting artists. The Union has good acoustics, but bad lines of vision, and as one person from the community was heard to comment recently, "This thing smells more like sweat socks every year!"

Still, Lon Sherer, GC music professor, sees the merits of the auditorium. He says, "Artists don't patronize our facility. When you're on-stage it looks like you have an audience of thousands, and performers often deliver their best because of that impression."

Goshen's two instrumental music groups, an orchestra and jazz band, have not been plagued by high fees, declining audiences, and less-than-perfect facilities, but they have had to overcome another problem. A scarcity of trained students and some lingering negative attitudes have slowed the development of instrumental groups.

By the mid-50's, the idea of an orchestra had gathered support. In 1957, GC students and members of the College Church formed a small orchestra under director Ralph Wade, a part-time music professor. The project was successful, and in 1959, the College hired Lon Sherer to organize and direct an orchestra of its own. Sherer remembers, "Our first concert drew a huge crowd, and Beethoven's First Symphony, our featured piece, went over splendidly!" Since then, the group has grown from about 20 musicians to over 70.

The orchestra, like all other campus music groups, benefited tremendously when the College rescinded the extra charge for applied music students in 1973. In the next three years the number of students taking music lessons shot from 35 to 143.

Perhaps changing attitudes were also responsible. Mary Oyer, who has been a professor of music for almost 40 years, comments, "I have been broadening my musical interests to include African music and other types outside the Western classical tradition. Students and people in the church have been broadening their musical interests in other ways. I think a major turning point was the acceptance of the folk idiom of the guitar in the '60's. People became much more open to many kinds of music after that."

The openness to different styles of music and the larger number of students taking music lessons probably were major factors in the creation of the Jazz Band.

Phil Clemens, director of the group, remembers how it began, "In the fall of 1975, I taught a colloquium on black music, and several students with jazz experience in high school began talking about the possibility of getting a group together. The next trimester I called an interest meeting and we began practicing. We gave two short performances that tri, one at the Carnival and another during convo time one Tuesday morning. They went over so well that in the fall of '76, the Jazz Band became a fully-organized, music-department-sponsored activity."

OLD GYMNASIUM
Messiah Concert by combined choruses, December 1946

Another relatively recent addition (1965) to Goshen's repertoire of performing arts, and acting, is the opera or musical produced every two years. The three most recent choices, Fiddler on the Roof (1973), Don Giovanni (1975), and Hansel and Gretel (1977), illustrate the wide variety of material students have performed.

Although the art of expressive speech has not involved as great a number of students over the years as has music, it has made a vital contribution to the College. The first speech organizations were the literary societies, of course. In 1911, the Oratorical Association was born. Ten years later inter-collegiate debate began, the only type of extramural competition for any student group for the next thirty years.

Formal drama, in contrast, dates back only to 1950, but its roots include interpretive reading in the literary societies and a few small productions by individual classes. School for Scandal, performed in 1933 by J. S. Umble's English 310 class, was probably the first recognizable play given at Goshen College.

The construction of the Union, with its large stage, opened the way for full-scale dramatic productions. Ed Metzler directed the first play given in the new auditorium, Thine Is the Power.

With the advent of this relatively novel art form, the administration suggested guidelines to be followed by actors. Jewelry, make-up, and women in men's clothing were thought to be inappropriate.

In 1958, John S. Umble, the English professor who had been a long-time supporter of drama and director of several plays, retired. Jess Yoder then took over Roy Umble's debate responsibilities, giving the younger Umble more time to devote to the theatre.

Roy Umble remembers, "During the first years of drama at Goshen, not many students had much acting experience, but we all used what we had, and we managed to produce some pretty good plays. Theatre at Goshen has always been an outlet for talented amateurs."

Looking back over the wide variety of plays, Professor Umble has chosen to direct, he says, "Over the years, I think I have tried to maintain a balance between comedy and tragedy, American and foreign plays, new and old plays. I didn't usually choose a topical play, but sometimes it happened that way. Christ and the Concrete City, which we did in 1958-59, dealt with Christians becoming relevant in an urban setting, a popular theme at that time. In 1970 we put on Women of Troy, which shows the horrible atrocities in war. We were definitely thinking of Viet Nam."

"I do want a play to make a statement I can live with, but that isn't usually my main concern. I look for an artistic play, among other things, and I often choose on an almost indefinable sense that, 'Yes ... I'd like to direct that play.'"

In recent years, the GC Players have been doing more than one-act plays in addition to the two major yearly productions. One-acts give a larger number of students a chance for acting experience and are often performed in the community as well as on campus.

Of the future in the new Umble Center, Umble says, "Of course, with the new facility, we'll have a much more versatile stage. We can perform on a small stage, a large stage, a thrust stage or a proscenium stage. We can even do theatre in the round if we want."

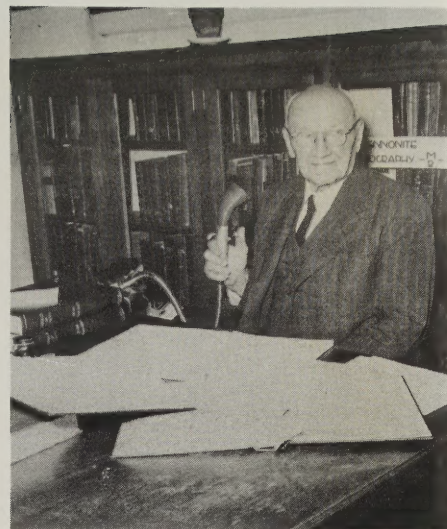

Roy Umble does not see the new center as the harbinger of a new era in the history of drama at Goshen College. He reflects, "We have been putting on fine performances at Goshen College for a good many years now, and we will keep on doing so. New and better facilities help us enlarge the tradition of quality we have inherited." His statement could apply to any of the performing arts.

JOHN S. UMBLE, PROFESSOR AND PIONEER

by Debra Hostetler

"I remember John Umble with a twinkle in his eye — a very jovial, cheerful person he was," says Don McCammon, manager of the Goshen College Bookstore and former student of Professor John Sylvanus Umble. "He had a very engaging smile, and was genuinely interested in students beyond the classroom," recalls Tilman Smith, another of Umble's one-time students.

Umble taught at Goshen College from 1924-1951, first as a professor of English, and from 1938 on as the chairman of the newly formed Speech Department. In addition to his classroom responsibilities, Umble served as debate coach for the entire span of his years at GC.

Reciting a list of positions filled and responsibilities delivered does not capture the influence of the man for whom GC's new drama building has been named. One of his very personal contributions grew out of his generosity and his commitment to the College.

There were no financial aid programs during most of Umble's teaching career. Usually there was no recourse for gifted but poor students except to find whatever work they could as soon as they graduated from high school. "Umble had an eye for talent and he hated to see that talent go undeveloped," remembers McCammon. In more than a few instances Umble dipped into his personal funds to make a college education possible for deserving students.

McCammon remembers his brother-in-law, Ken Snapp of Bristol. "During one of Umble's talent searches in local high schools, he met Ken, an excellent student and a fine musician, who wanted to come to Goshen College the following year, but couldn't afford to. After talking with Ken, Umble offered to buy him a second-hand car, furnish gas to GC and back, and loan him the money for tuition and books." Ken Snapp graduated with a music degree, went on for graduate study, has taught at several universities, and is currently band instructor at Western State College of Colorado at Gunnison.

Perhaps the financial struggles Umble himself endured in his student years made him extraordinarily sympathetic to the similar struggles of others. In his autobiography he recounts that during 1905-1906, when he studied at Northwestern Illinois University in Evanston, he supported himself on a 25¢-per-hour job at the local police department. His chief responsibility in the fall was to watch for illegal beer wagons. In 1906, he was promoted to traffic patrolman, and enforced the 15 mph speed limit on a specially equipped bicycle.

In spite of periodic hardships, Umble seems to have enjoyed his student days, and engaged in typical highjinks with a certain youthful presumptiveness. During his years at the Elkhart Institute (1899-1901) he was one of the founders of the Happy Six Fraternity and the Society of Philosophical Research, whose motto proclaimed "We delve, we soar, for truth."

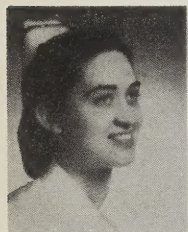

Life probably taught him to modify such sweeping statements, but the note of optimism remained central to his personality. Professor of Economics Carl Kreider remembers, "Even in his older years, when he had numerous aches and pains, he would always find something positive to talk about during our visits."

Part of this optimistic bent came from a continuing dedication to work which interested him. The various facets of speech communication were his main enthusiasms, and he was able to express these interests in almost every class he taught. "I liked the way he brought oral interpretation into the study of literature," comments Mary Royer, GC education professor. "He would expand our understanding of a great book by reading sections of it aloud. He was one of my most delightful professors, partly because of this integrative approach and partly because of his enthusiasm for his subject."

Umble taught classes in literature, debate, oratory and oral interpretation, but his interest in drama was sometimes more difficult to express. During most of his teaching career, the theatre as we know it, was not part of GC life. He did find an outlet through special dramatic projects in literature classes. "Anne of Old Salem" was one such play presented by an American Literature class in the early 30's.

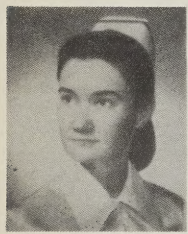

Reflecting on Umble's life, President J. Lawrence Burkholder says, "John Umble was associated with Goshen College during the time it was struggling for survival and dignity. He belonged to a generation that attempted to transcend the cultural limits of a rural background and the economic limits of the depression. He assured College and students that they could make it and history has proved that they did. The students he helped are some of our most loyal alumni."

25 YEARS — A TIME TO GROW

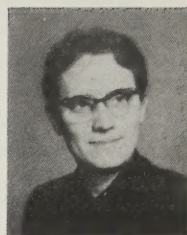

"I saw the transition from a nursing curriculum that consisted of pre-nursing and traditional clinical courses to a professional curriculum based on a theoretical framework. Today the program emphasizes processes and problem-solving techniques over mere lists of diseases and drugs. Nurses with this kind of education are better equipped to adapt to changes in society and technology, and will be able to function tomorrow as well as today.

"On this twenty-fifth anniversary, it is gratifying to see how alumni have grown, developed, and moved into positions of responsibility and leadership. I'm very proud of them."

A SILVER ANNIVERSARY FOR THE NURSING DIVISION

by Janice Martin

Twenty-five years ago, in 1953, the first nursing students received their degrees from Goshen College. Each of the eight women who shook hands with President Ernest Miller knew she was a pioneer, for just three years earlier the College had launched not only the first collegiate nursing program within the Mennonite Church but the first in the entire state of Indiana.

The idea of a collegiate school of nursing first arose at a meeting of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities in 1941. Church leaders acknowledged the need for qualified nurses to help the church relate to the physical as well as the spiritual ministry. The institution, they decided, was to be in Elkhart County, Indiana.

Orpah Mosemann, founding director of the nursing department, recalled that the Mission Board was going to build a hospital especially for the students' clinical experience in Elkhart. The hospital would be entirely church-run and would offer a trusted alternative to training "in a worldly environment."

The community reaction to a new Elkhart hospital, however, was less than supportive. Some feared that Goshen College was too eager to take charge, not only at the proposed Mennonite hospital but at Elkhart General as well.

It was only through the profound statesmanship of President Miller and Frank Lobley, Chairman of the Board at Elkhart General, that the collegiate school of nursing at Goshen College was ever established. The College and hospital eventually agreed to the transportation of students from Goshen to Elkhart for clinical experience. Such a relationship between theoretical training and practical training was new in nursing education.

The next step in the creation of the nursing department was the hiring of capable staff. Miss Mosemann had been attending Western Reserve University, majoring in administration of nursing services. She finished her training in February, 1950, and came to Goshen College in March. On August 14, the first eight students began their study.

Classes met in a nursing arts laboratory off the greenhouse in Science Hall. After two weeks of instruction about drugs, solutions, and nursing arts, the students traveled to Elkhart General for their first practical experience. They were shuttled back and forth each day in a new three-seat DeSoto. Miss Mosemann and Miss Mildred Shoemaker, the instructors, drove.

"Affiliations" gave the students practice in pediatrics at Cook County Hospital, Chicago; in psychiatry at Logansport State Hospital; and in communicable diseases at Healthwin Sanitarium, South Bend.

The class developed a closeness because of its small number and its newness. They made up songs while riding to night duty in the college jeep and grew to love their iron-lung patients like members of their own families. "We sort of stuck together because we were the only ones that first year in green and white stripes, and the only ones who had such odd schedules," said Margaret Brubaker Ashley, a member of that first class.

The first years of the nursing program were exciting to students, faculty, doctors, and patients.

"I sensed that our nursing program was in the pupa stage and was constantly being reviewed — that we eight students were closely observed by both the nursing faculty and the Elkhart Hospital staff," said Charlotte Hertzler Croyle, another "first" student.

"Our program was new and we often heard comments from the Elkhart staff that indicated great reservations about such a program," she said. "But as our training progressed I personally received much affirmation from doctors and nurses and felt they went out of their way to make our program a success."

The curriculum extended over four calendar years and led to a bachelor of science in nursing degree. After completing the program the students were eligible to write the State Board examinations for licensure as registered nurses.

Miss Mosemann admitted her pride at the first graduation ceremony and her gratification when all eight students in the class of '53 passed their state examinations.

"Those eight students were very courageous," stated Miss Mosemann. "They really had no idea what their future would hold."

Goshen College first planned to accommodate twenty students in each class but found it feasible to increase that number. Thirteen students made up the second class and twenty-two the third. In 1952 thirty-one students enrolled in the pre-nursing course and thirty-five in 1953.

"I really felt we were in business by 1953," said Miss Mosemann.

The 1950s and '60s, according to the nursing director, were marked by three great challenges: accreditation by the National League of Nursing, the content revision of curriculum, and the eternal search for faculty.

The nursing curriculum had merited accreditation with the National Nursing Accrediting Service. After a great deal of study and paperwork the department received full national accreditation in 1961.

The nursing faculty found that changes in medical science occurred so rapidly that the Goshen nursing curriculum demanded constant revision. Three or four major overhauls were necessary to insure that students learned the most up-to-date techniques and procedures.

While the College had no difficulties attracting students, it faced some barriers in securing faculty. Verna Zimmerman, associate professor emerita of nursing, acknowledged that students went into nursing chiefly to nurse, not to teach. It was difficult to draw qualified professionals from the bedside.

"Even so," said Miss Mosemann, "we've always had a capable, dedicated faculty. My most rewarding moments have been when we have all supported each other and grown together as a faculty."

Physical resources for the nursing students multiplied as the program matured. High Park Dormitory, built originally as a housing facility for nurses, was constructed in 1956. Goshen General Hospital opened its doors to nursing students shortly after it was built in 1966, and the Excel Nursing Education Center on campus was dedicated in 1975.

The demise of "affiliations" has led to clinical opportunities in six Elkhart County health facilities. The nursing program has grown to twenty-four courses, sixteen faculty, and 202 students. Nursing students make up almost one-fifth of the student body at Goshen College.

Marilyn Leichty, current director of nursing, predicts that the nursing enrollment will remain steady, with an increase only in the number of registered nurses returning for their bachelor's degrees.

A new vista in the nursing program, she said, is an increased emphasis on health care in addition to sickness care.

"Nurses are setting a bigger role for themselves in health promotion," she said. "As the public becomes more and more sophisticated in its knowledge of diet, exercise, and drugs, nursing professionals must be prepared to respond."

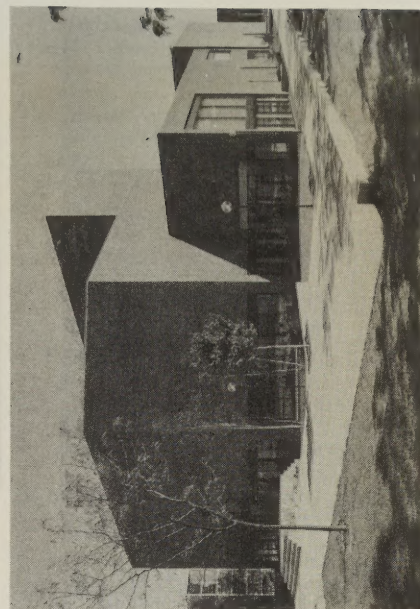

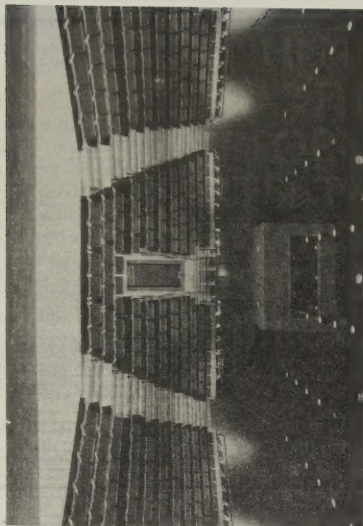

Another new vista is in continuing education for nurses. Courses and seminars designed by Kathryn Ponzio at Goshen College have involved over 1,500 registered and licensed practical nurses since 1973. Seminar topics have included sleep therapy, charting, hypertension, aging, pharmacology, respiratory care, and transactional analysis. The continuing education in nursing program was accredited by the American Nurses Association this past spring.

Altogether 820 women and 28 men have completed the baccalaureate nursing program at Goshen College since the first eight students graduated twenty-five years ago. Students now processing their learning packets in the Self-Learning Center can look back to a rich heritage of competent, Christian instruction.

PROFESSOR STANLEY SHENK LEADS FOURTH BIBLE SEMINAR IN MIDDLE EAST

Dr. Stanley Shenk, professor of Bible, will lead a Middle East Bible Seminar from May 24 to June 15, 1979. Participants will spend five days in Jordan and fifteen days in Israel.

The course this spring will mark the fourth Bible course Prof. Shenk has taught in the Middle East through Goshen College, and the seventh tour he has led to the Middle East.

Members of the seminar will go to Jordan and Israel as both pilgrims and scholars. They will study the geography, history, and archaeology of Palestine with the purpose of understanding the Bible more clearly.

They will also have opportunity to survey and analyze the present complex scene in the Middle East.

After a one-day orientation in eastern Pennsylvania, seminar members will fly from New York to Amman, Jordan. In Jordan they will tour Mt. Nebo, Heshbon, Madeba, Jerash, and Petra, the "rose-red city, half as old as time."

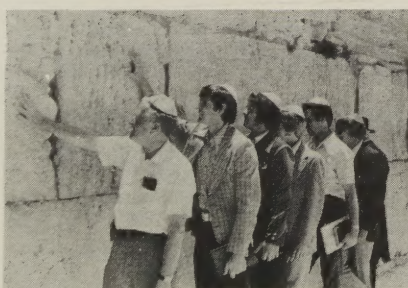

On Thursday, May 31, the tour group will cross the Jordan River at the Allenby Bridge. The group will visit Old Jericho and Elisha's Spring, then go "up to Jerusalem." In Jerusalem, the group will be headquartered at Christ Church Hospice, a "splendid old Anglican hostel for English-speaking pilgrims," according to Prof. Shenk.

Visits in Jerusalem and its environs will include the Wailing Wall, the Temple Mount, the Damascus Gate, Mt. Zion, the Kidron Valley, the Mount of Olives, Garden of Gethsemane, the Chagall Windows of Hadassah Hospital, and the Knesset. Side trips will be taken to Bethany, Bethlehem, Hebron, Jacob's Well, and Gibeon.

The group will then go "on the road" to locations including Qumran, Beersheba, Caesarea, Mt. Carmel, Nazareth, the Valley of Elah, the Forest of the Martyrs, Kibbutz Lavi, Capernaum, Mt. Tabor, and the Valley of Armageddon.

The Middle East Bible Seminar is open to all interested people, young and old; alumni are especially welcome. The seminar need not be taken for academic credit.

For more information write Prof. Shenk at Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526.

Thank you, alumni, church, and friends!

The gallery of pictures you see on this page and on page 24 conveys something of the spirit, as well as the appearance, of our campus. It is your contributions which keep the College looking good and going strong from year to year, growing in faith and developing in program. It is you, as well as faculty and staff and students, who make the school. Goshen College is your College.

A THANK-YOU NOTE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Alumni and Friends:

Since Goshen College operates consistently on a 1% margin of income over expenses, I feel that I should thank each of you individually as if you were the one who enabled us to close the books for 1977-78 in the black. Your contribution did the trick and so in our eyes you are a hero! If it were not for you, Goshen College would be in the red—and that, of course, would not only look bad but it would be bad.

You may be interested to know that few colleges of our size and type raise more money per student than your alma mater. Last year we received $804 for each student toward the educational budget. This places us ninth in the nation. Several colleges that did better are in the unusual position of receiving large gifts from individual donors or of receiving a windfall. The reason why annual contributions to Goshen College are comparatively large and yet our budget margins are thin is the fact that our endowment is extremely small. Educational consultants tell us that a college of our size ought to have an endowment of about $20 million. Our endowment is slightly over $2 million. That means that our expenditures must be closely controlled and annual giving must be exceptionally high.

And so, thank you again for another year of good support for Goshen College.

The high cost of balancing a college budget

Like many people, you might assume that Goshen College 'has plenty of money' because we have balanced our budget for 39 consecutive years. Not so! Balancing the budget simply means that — with considerable planning, effort, and sacrifice — we have managed to hold expenditures to the amount of income we receive from contributions and tuition payments.

Consider for a moment the rationale behind a balanced budget.

- The Board of Overseers and the Board of Education mandate our planning a balanced budget and achieving that goal if possible. They formulated this policy in 1939 after a major debt liquidation drive.
- Foundations, governments, and other donors need to know that we operate with a full measure of fiscal responsibility — indeed, they would not support us otherwise.
- Our alumni, church supporters, and friends need assurance that we continue to manage our money, money, programs, and personnel with a constant regard for good stewardship. Spending money that is not available does not build long-term credibility or trust.

Now, consider the high cost of balancing the budget.

- Faculty and staff salaries have not kept pace with the cost of living.
- Some legitimate and highly desirable programs, such as the urban cross-cultural program, cannot be implemented at this time. In February 1978 the Menonite Board of Education adopted a statement on urban concerns which strongly urged Menonite educators to strengthen programs for urban ministry. The College cannot develop such a program without additional funds.
- We must delay important capital improvements, such as new roofing (Union, Seminary, Kratz, Westlawn), energy conservation measures (thermal windows for the Ad Building, Science Hall, Coffman, Kulp), and equipment replacement (typewriters, College cars). Furthermore, we can afford to do only a limited amount of 'preventive' maintenance.
- In essence, the College operates with virtually no margin of safety and with no reserves for contingencies.

Balancing the budget — despite the cost — means that we move ahead on faith with realization that we are taking some risks. Because of a growing student body, careful management, and generous contributions, the College "makes it" from year to year. Not with plenty of money, but with plenty of thanks to the people who make it possible.

Computer assists in compiling honor rolls, other information

GC's computer team finished processing alumni names and other information just in time to turn out the big 1978 Honor Roll. (See the May Bulletin for details on our computer, Ana B.) The list which appears in this Bulletin is a photocopy of the computer printout sheets on contributors from each class.

Sometimes, in transferring data from manual systems to computers, information gets "lost" or names get turned around. If your name appears incorrectly, or if it has been omitted, please let us know. We'll give Ana B. the right information.

Class report 1978

A word of explanation about this report: The table includes, for each class, the number of givers, the total amount of gifts, and the percentage of the class participating in gifts to the 1978 Alumni Fund which is used for operating expenses. The Alumni Honor Roll, on the other hand, recognizes all alumni givers, whether the gift was received for the 1978 Alumni Fund or was designated for a special purpose.

*Boldface and asterisk denote best year ever in total gifts.

Alumni artists shape five-year picture

The art of giving has been developed by GC alumni over a five-year period, as the table below shows. Although the numbers we've assembled may not seem impressive all by themselves, if you analyze the figures they show:

- An increase of 6% both in Annual Fund giving and in giving gifts for designated projects;
- An impressive increase of 25% in total alumni giving;
- A whopping 73% increase in total funds contributed through the Phonothon

We appreciate, also, the 6% increase in alumni participation over the past five years and are particularly grateful that the size of the average gift has increased by 17% in these inflationary times. On a nation-wide basis, in contrast, alumni participation in annual funds increased by only half a percentage point during the past five years, and the size of the average gift increased by only 13%. The contrast makes Goshen's picture seem even brighter, and if more people pitch in next year, our alumni artists should do well indeed.

Phonothon rings up over $40,000

The 1978 Phonothon, held March 13 through 22, brought in $43,452 for the Annual Fund. Volunteer phoners included students, alumni and parents; 3,200 calls were attempted. The previous year 2,890 calls were scheduled, and the '77 Phonothon totaled $41,552. The photograph above is from the '78 Phonothon kick-off luncheon. Seated, left to right, are Lonnie Buerge '72; campus Phonothon organizer Richard Armstrong '80; Rebecca Nussbaum Rohrer '79, winner of the '77 Phonothon award for most pledged money; alumna Verna Troyer '43; Robert Wenger, GC parent and winner of the '76 Phonothon award; and Ralph Gunden, '78 Phonothon chairman.

The "challenge" of renovation: Schrock Plasterers begin work on the Westlawn Lounge.

Classes of 1970-1977 contribute to campus lounge renovations

Lowell and Jueldine Rupp, Pettisville, OH, gave a $25,000 gift to the '78 Fund, to be used for matching new and increased giving from the Classes of 1970 to 1977. The matched gifts were used to renovate and improve areas on campus.

New and increased giving from members and friends of the Classes of '70 to '77 totaled $18,444. To complete the challenge, some contributions were used from the Women's Missionary and Service Commission groups, since they contributed especially to the renovation of Westlawn Lounge. From these two sources, the $25,000 was matched.

At the same time as the Westlawn Lounge renovation, the Union Lounge in the Snack Shop was refurbished, as well as twelve floor lounges in the dormitories.

Volunteers contribute time, commitment, spirit

Contributions cannot always be measured in terms of dollars. Time, commitment, energy, spirit — these are resources which are literally invaluable to the College. Listed below are GC volunteers who gave liberally of themselves and their resources, organizing alumni and parents' meetings; serving on advisory boards and councils; planning and telephoning for the Annual Fund; and being effective, articulate advocates for the College. We are thankful for all they have done during the past year.

Corporate matching gift report

Deferred giving, bequests benefit the college

Were you aware that many corporations and businesses are willing to match the gifts which their employees make to colleges? The names you see below represent only a fraction of those firms, and if you're interested in the program, we'll send you a complete list. Write to Alice Roth, director of alumni relations, Goshen College.

A word or two about the summary table below: Although the 1978 dollar total was slightly lower than 1977, we're gratified that more people and more corporations made matching gifts to the College than in the previous year. It's easy to participate — just find out if your organization is a "matching fund firm," send in your gift to GC, and let your employer know you've sent the gift. We'll do the rest.

Social work program receives national accreditation for maximum possible period

—by Janice Martin

The Goshen College Social Work program has just received accreditation from the Council on Social Work Education for five years, the maximum possible period. The Council is a national accrediting body for all U.S. social work programs, both graduate and undergraduate.

"The accreditation put a grin on my face that I couldn't wipe off for a long, long time," remarked David Harley, director of social work education.

"It was a terrific affirmation," said Robert Birkey, assistant professor of social work education. "It provided a vote of confidence that we were headed in the right direction."

The accreditation process was long and complex. It began in 1972, included two formal applications, and by 1977 produced two self-study reports which described the social work program, its objectives, and its faculty. An evaluation team from the Council visited the campus this spring, spending two days with faculty, students, field instructors, agency representatives, and administration.

In 1972 the Goshen College faculty decided to shift the social work education program from a "pre-professional" to a "professional" program which would prepare the graduate for beginning social work practice. Soon afterward the Council on Social Work Education began the process to accredit undergraduate social work programs. Goshen's first application for accreditation was not accepted since several aspects of the program needed further development and improvement.

After consultation with Dr. Cyrus Behroozi, associate dean of the Indiana University School of Social Work, the new department head, David Harley, began in 1976 to outline clear objectives for the department. The Council had directed Goshen College to expand the student advising process, to state more clearly the criteria for admission into the program, and to hire another faculty member who would bring sexual or racial diversity to the program.

After the department spent a strenuous summer of writing, typing, printing, and collating the report in 1977, the Council agreed to a site visit.

The two site visitors, Lowell E. Jenkins from Colorado State University, and Guy Shuttlesworth from the University of Texas at Austin, visited the College April 3 and 4.

According to the Council's report that followed the site visit, "The interesting part of the program is that the organizing principles tend to be those of service to others, social-political justice, and acceptance of individual difference ... The value system and philosophy of this college seem to be especially compatible with that of social work."

Special qualities of the program lay in the solid field placements, the excellent community support, the high quality of the students, the faculty resources, and the upgraded physical accommodations of the department.

Word of the accreditation arrived June 29 at 9:30 a.m. "We were delighted to have been accredited for five years," said David Harley. "We were expecting accreditation but thought it would be for only one to three years."

Accreditation means that employment opportunities will be vastly improved for GC graduates. More and more states are asking that social workers be licensed, and only those graduating from an accredited school can be qualified for licensure.

The social work faculty now can focus this year on implementing the objectives they had set in preparation for accreditation.

Harley, Birkey, Howard Kauffman, Michael Yoder and part-time faculty member Goldie Ivory will be joined this year by Anna Bowman, most recently personnel director at the Children's Aid Society of Toronto, Canada.

About 55 students will be enrolled in the program.

Eight teachers and two administrators will join the Goshen College faculty this fall for the 1978-79 school year, announced Dr. J. Lawrence Burkholder, President of the College.

Anna Bowman, Toronto, Canada, will teach as associate professor of social work. She received a bachelor's degree from Goshen College and an M.S.W. from Smith College School for Social Work in Northampton, MA.

Bowman did social work with the Family Service of York and York County, PA, from 1961-68. Since 1968 she has worked with the Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto, most recently as personnel director.

Stephen Shank, who taught at Goshen College 1974-76, will teach part-time in the art department as assistant professor. Shank graduated from Goshen College in 1974 and received a master's degree in art history from Indiana University.

M. Douglas Anderson, from Wayne, IL, will join the faculty as associate professor of business. Anderson received a B.S. from Northwestern University in 1964 and a master of business administration from Harvard University Graduate School of Business.

Since 1967 he has taught finance at Northern Illinois University, Dekalb, IL. He has also served as president of Anderson and Associates, Geneva, IL, a financial consulting firm he began in 1968.

Music Team

David and Melinda Hoeffcker will share one full-time position as assistant professors of music. The Hoeffckers, from Bogota, Colombia, received bachelor's degrees from the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, NY. Mr. Hoeffcker, in addition, received a master's degree in music education from Eastman and a master's degree in sacred theology from Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary in Wenham, MA.

Mrs. Hoeffcker is a concert violinist and strings teacher specializing in the Suzuki method of instruction. Mr. Hoeffcker, a French horn player, has taught at the Monroe Community College, Rochester, NY, Gordon College, and Colegio Nueva Granada, Bogota.

Marvin Blickenstaff will teach part-time as a professor of music. As a concert pianist he has performed with university and professional orchestras in Texas, Ohio, Indiana, Idaho, Georgia, Kansas and North Carolina.

Blickenstaff, from Chapel Hill, NC, received a bachelor's degree from Oberlin Conservatory of Music, Oberlin, OH, and a master's degree in music from Indiana University. He has taught at Indiana University; McPherson College, McPherson, KS; Fort Hays Kansas State College; Stecher and Horowitz School of Music, Cedarhurst, NY; the Oberlin Conservatory of Music; and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Nursing Professor

Kraus book accepted for 1979 publication

C. Norman Kraus, professor of religion, has had a manuscript accepted for spring publication by William B. Eerdmans.

The essay, entitled The Authentic Witness, attempts to go beyond orthodoxy to establish a touchstone for evaluating the authenticity of Christian witness.

Beginning with the incarnation of Jesus as the original witness, the manuscript provides the criteria for the continuing mission of the church. Subjects deal with the Bible as witness in a witnessing community, the interaction of individuals and community in witness, and the identity and role of the church in mission.

In short, according to Kraus, his book attempts to answer the question, "How in the world is the church?"

Alumni Said It . . .

"I shall always cherish the experiences which we, my daughter Ingrid and I, had at GC—especially at a time arriving from a defeated and totally destroyed country.

"It was the personal interest which touched us, feeling the concern and the Christian values the most. Memories which come to mind and stand above all others were the tremendous spiritual influence and help we received, especially from Miss Viola Good, Dr. and Mrs. Glen Miller, Mr. L. Bachman, and Dr. and Mrs. Atlee Beechy. These caring people we will never forget and always appreciate. Through these relationships we were able to find real direction and meaning in life again.

"May God bless Goshen College abundantly!"
Mrs. Ellen Keller x '52

"I see Goshen as an important part of my life. And as I reflect on my past involvements I want to give back financially a bit of what I've received. Please use this in areas you feel important at this time.

"Thanks and God bless you all."
Lucy Gerber '76

"I have much deep appreciation for Goshen College faculty members who contributed their time, talents, knowledge and friendship toward my growth. Especially do I feel grateful to Professors Roy Umble and Atlee Beechy. Norman Kraus made the study of Christ's life interesting.

"May God continue to call dedicated persons as teachers of higher education in our church colleges, and I pray that young persons will answer His call to serve Him at Goshen College, in the years to come."

Esther Deal '53
(Mrs. L. Thomas Deal)

This alumnus says it a little differently: with Haiku

Harley King '71 has recently published a collection of haiku poetry to celebrate the birth of his daughter, Johari Marisol. The haiku is a Japanese form of poetry, very brief, which distills the essence of a moment or a thought; King defines it as "a glimpse at a moment in time."

An example from his book, winter SILENCE, gives such a glimpse:

Under the shade tree
the old carpenter dozes — sparrows pick up crumbs.

King says that he "first encountered haiku during the study of Zen my freshman year." He spent hours in the Snack Shop jotting down his thoughts, taking care to conform to the five-syllable, seven-syllable, five-syllable format in each poem. "Since the fall of 1975," he says, "I have become aware of the many subtleties of writing haiku through reading American haiku magazines."

With 30 poems published in such magazines as Bonsai, Cicada, Modern Haiku, and Outch (a Japanese publication), in addition to his book, King considers himself a "serious writer" of haiku. Others appear to agree — he won third place in the 1977 Western World Haiku Society's Annual Haiku contest in the "season word" category.

If the poem from winter SILENCE caught your fancy, you may order a copy of the book from Harley King, 1116 Broadmoor, Apt. 2, Champaign, IL 61820, for $1.00.

SILENCE

Goshen College at the 10th Mennonite World Conference

Since international awareness has long been a trademark of Goshen College, it is not surprising that GC was well represented at the tenth Mennonite World Conference in Wichita, KS, July 25-30.

GC faculty involvement spanned a wide range of activity. News stories under the byline of journalism professor Stuart Showalter, working for the summer with the Wichita Eagle, appeared frequently in the newspaper; Alta Hertzler '62, GC art department, had a woven wall hanging on display; and Robert Hostetter, who has taught in the English departments of both Hesston and Goshen Colleges, wrote the commissioned drama for the Conference.

GC President J. Lawrence Burkholder hosted an afternoon reception for GC alumni; more than 200 people attended. Especially notable was the large number of recent graduates who came to exchange views and renew acquaintances.

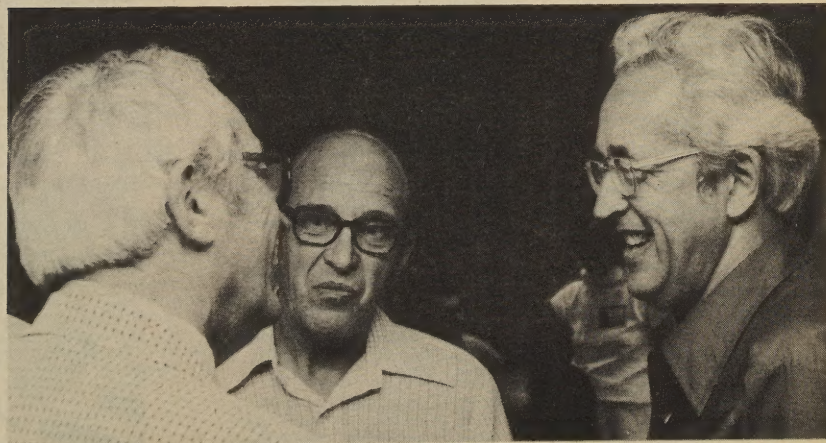

Reports indicate that GC's professor of music, Mary K. Oyer '47, was a central figure in the Conference. A former faculty member, John W. Miller '48, summed it up this way in his column in the Mennonite Reporter: "We were a mixed multitude of 10,000 ... And if it was not always clear what held us together, there was no question who did ... Mary (Oyer) was our mother, modest, always cheerful, always gracious, her pitch-perfect voice leading us through song after song." Miller went on to describe Conference president Million (Belete) as "our father" and the executive secretary of MWC, Paul (Kraybill), as "our elder brother". One GC alumnus commented that "Mary (Oyer) was the teacher at her best — teaching us songs from other cultures that we didn't imagine we could sing."

Our Mission Statement — A Proposal

President Burkholder in the classroom — part of the teaching team that makes Goshen a good place to learn.

In 1949 Goshen College developed a Mission of the College statement. That statement described the character and purpose of the College and it appeared for many years thereafter in the catalog.

But much has happened since then. Enrollment has more than doubled; the College added nursing, social work and business curricula; athletics became intercollegiate; the SST was launched; the seminary was founded and the faculty was enlarged. Then, too, the world changed and the churches as well.

Several years ago we felt that the time had come for a restatement of our purpose as a church college. But such a restatement is not easily or quickly done. Consequently, a special committee, consisting of faculty and students, worked for two years. Their work resulted in the present formulation. It is a tentative formulation — tentative not only in the sense that certain refinements of language remain to be made, but also in that it needs to be tested by faculty, official boards, and congregations. Recently representatives of Region IV met at Goshen for what turned out to be a most helpful review of the statement.

A study of the mission of the College is, of course, addressed first of all to the College itself. But Goshen College wishes to address its findings to the churches as well. Therefore, we hope that the churches will make a thorough and critical examination of the statement. Goshen College regards this statement as a proposal.

In it, we propose a joint venture of mission within which the purposes of the College and the Church are united.

What we envisage in the future is an organic relationship between the churches and Goshen College. Here at the College we want to be seen as an extension of the congregations. The challenge, therefore, is for the churches to clarify their mission and to translate the mission of the College and the churches into what could be called a movement.

That is saying a lot but it is not out of line with the thinking of the General Assembly of the Mennonite Church as it explores the possibility of a new mission to the cities as its area of concentration for the remainder of the century.

Goshen College Tentative Statement of Purpose May 1978

Identity Goshen College, a bachelor's-degree-granting institution sponsored by the Mennonite Church, is open to all students interested in an educational program committed to Biblical faith and practice as revealed and demonstrated by Jesus Christ.

Liberal Arts As a liberal arts college, Goshen strives to be a community of educators and students providing a learning environment which fosters personal, social, intellectual and spiritual growth; which nurtures those skills, processes, disciplines and methodologies required for systematic study and problem solving; which provides sufficient knowledge in one subject area as a base for advanced training or professional work; which develops an appreciation for and critical understanding of human experience and cultural variety; which builds confidence, acceptance and identity necessary for purposeful living in church and society.

Church-Related As a ministry of the Mennonite Church, Goshen College intends to enrich and extend the life of the church and its mission in the world by transmitting and exploring the meaning of Christian faith and discipleship; by relating Christian perspectives and values to learning and professional life; by encouraging active participation and leadership in the congregation, and by expanding the influence of such ideals as love and peace, justice and order, stewardship and benevolence.

Resource As a center of continuing education, scholarship and public service, Goshen expects to assist Mennonite congregations and agencies, Elkhart and surrounding counties, with life-long educational and cultural activities for increasing knowledge through research, writing and publication; and for expanding awareness and more responsible service in the world.

Affirmations The governing board and faculty of Goshen College view the College as an educational institution giving concrete expression to their faith in God and Christian mission in the world. They affirm the doctrine and practice of the Mennonite Church as interpreted by the Mennonite General Assembly and formulated in such documents as the 1963 Mennonite Confession of Faith.

The Anabaptist-Mennonite tradition of biblical faith provides the theological emphases that give Goshen College its distinctive character. While the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ can never be summarized in brief statements, we offer the following affirmations as guidelines for the expression of our faith and as perspectives guiding the educational program.

First, we acknowledge the reality of God, the creator of all things, transcendent source of power in the universe, the sovereign ruler of peoples.

Second, we recognize Jesus Christ as Son of God, as Lord of Life, and as Savior from the bondage of sin. Through His life, death, and resurrection, the kingdom of God has been inaugurated and through the Spirit His rule extends over all powers and authorities. We accept the Great Commission as a call to bring the message of our risen Lord to all the world so that all people might be saved.

Third, we affirm the Believers Church as defining both the shape and mission of the church. Central to this view are such emphases as voluntarism, fellowship, sharing, discernment, discipline, mission, evangelism, celebration. The character of the Believers Church is that of a peoplehood which transcends and overcomes cultural, national, racial and ethnic boundaries.

Fourth, we consider the Christian life to be a life of discipleship, a personal response of faith and obedience to the grace of God which frees us from sin. We believe that the call to discipleship leads to a life of holiness, witness, and service to humanity in the spirit and power of Jesus.

Fifth, we understand that the "good news," the Gospel of the kingdom, includes peacemaking, evangelism, love, and social justice in a world characterized by violence, oppression, and injustice. We are committed to healing and hope for all people everywhere; we seek especially to be conscious of the needs of minority groups and disadvantaged people.

Sixth, we regard education as a process not only for the development of skills and comprehension of information but also for the development of character and acquiring of sensibilities. As such, education is a moral activity, value-laden, and involves the whole person in the determination of choices and the assimilation of change. The learning process best takes place in a context of community where mutuality and caring characterize all relationships.

Rich in Program - Authentic in Service

by
Orville Yoder and Judith Davis

Goshen College is rich in the diversity of its students — over 1100 of them, drawn from 36 states, 20 foreign countries, and four Canadian provinces. We are rich also in the variety of our programs.

Students may choose Biblical studies, church ministries, or religion from among 30 majors — including accounting, art, biology, business, chemistry, communication, economics, early childhood education, elementary education, English, family life, French, German, history, history and investigative skills, home economics, mathematics, music, natural science, nursing, physical education, physics, politics and society, psychology, social work, sociology, and Spanish. They may take a co-major in church music, peace studies, religion, or world service as well as in business, communication, family life, or tropical agriculture.

For those who wish to take a short, specialized program in one area of study, the departments have developed one-year courses of study which lead to certificates in biblical studies, church music, congregational leadership, Mennonite studies, and world service. Students may also obtain certificates in business administration, international education, piano pedagogy, recreational leadership, and teaching English as a second language.

The Center for Discipleship is a College program of continuing education offered as a service to the Church. With its conferences, workshops, and seminars, the Center unites the College with the Churches to search for the practical implications of obedience to Christ in the modern world. Each year the Center sponsors a Discipleship Forum series from January through March; the theme for 1979 is "Missions, Evangelism, and Church Growth." Other projects for the next academic year include a Religion and Science forum in March and a May consultation on reporting church news in the church press.

Nearly all Goshen academic programs include work in Humane Studies, a 37-hour bloc of liberal arts courses. Humane studies includes freshman group-oriented inquiry; cross-cultural experiences; Biblical and theological study; the methodologies of the humanities, social sciences and natural sciences; and participation in creative forms of expression.

An important part of the Humane Studies program is the Study-Service Trimester (SST) abroad, which gives expression to the academic ideal of study and the Christian ideal of service. As students prepare for, participate in, and reflect on their experience in a developing country, they have an opportunity to integrate studies and values in an atmosphere of authentic commitment.

SST is only one dimension of Goshen's international programs. Each summer, "Goshen in Europe" takes from 50 to 100 students to study literature, folklore, and avenues to peacemaking in Ireland; to discover the history and culture of England, France, Germany, Switzerland, and the Scandinavian countries; and to gain additional experience and fluency in speaking Western European languages. In 1978-79, twelve juniors and seniors will stay in Barcelona, Spain; Marbourg, Germany; and Strasbourg, France, studying the literature, history, and culture of their host countries. Goshen sponsors this program, together with Brethren Colleges Abroad and other institutions in the Council of Mennonite Colleges.

Strong in Mission: The Church and its Colleges

by John Mosemann

"We have a defined constituency. We have roots." These are good words, right words, spoken by a faculty member in a recent consultation. Goshen College is deeply rooted in the Mennonite Church. That is where we belong. Throughout its history, the College has maintained this as its primary loyalty. We constantly remind ourselves of our church orientation and would not wish for a different one. But "a church-related college" needs "a college-related church"!

each other. The College is the offspring and servant of the Church. The Church is the owner and guarantor of the College. Understandings need to be shared. Mutual expectations must be spelled out. Acceptable guidelines need to be recognized so that each can help shape and serve the goals of each. This should not be difficult since "our mission is one".

The following analysis tries to sketch out roles and expectations. The College is eager to maintain clear awareness of its Church orientation and the obligations of that relationship. The Church needs to be equally sensitive to what it means to sponsor higher education. The perceptions need to be mutually supportive and reinforcing.

These two realities depend so much upon

The Mennonite General Assembly at Estes Park asked colleges to take seriously the need for developing future leadership in urban centers across America. Since 1973, Goshen College has cooperated with the Urban Life Center in Chicago to provide opportunities for Goshen students to live and study in a major urban center. Students from six to eight other church-related colleges learn under the direction of professors on their home campuses and at the Urban Life Center. Learning from the milieu of the city is emphasized in this program.

In addition to our regular professional (business, education, nursing, social work) and preprofessional (seminary, dentistry, medicine) programs, Goshen cooperates with other colleges and universities to offer programs in engineering, medical technology, and tropical agriculture. These programs lead to a baccalaureate degree either from GC or from the cooperating institution. Goshen also cooperates with the Mennonite Central Committee; our Home Economics Department co-sponsors the annual Nutrition Seminar in Jamaica with MCC, and our Biology Department co-sponsors the Seminar in World Hunger.

Formal academic programs, necessary as they are, do not comprise our total educational program. Goshen has an extraordinary variety of chapel and convocation programs, lecture forums, musical and dramatic events, departmental seminars and informal get-togethers. Students may join the staff of the radio station; write for the Record, the Maple Leaf, or the Bulletin; publish their own works through the Pinchpenny Press; participate in athletics; help run faculty/student government; or join a campus club. Responding to students' spiritual and psychological needs, the Student Development Division, a team of 16 counselors, gives support and advice in career/life planning, scholastic affairs, and faith development.

Diverse programs, challenging and enriching, attract good students and produce service-minded alumni. Most Goshen students are highly motivated and value-oriented; most alumni tend to cluster in the service and "helping" professions. Goshen alumni live in 50 states, Puerto Rico, and Canada; at last count, 365 Goshen graduates lived in 79 different countries on six continents, most of them involved in volunteer activities.

The richness and diversity of our programs afford different kinds of students a number of opportunities to develop their own talents for learning and service — to grow academically and spiritually in a nurturing Christian environment.

Global in Outreach: On Naming an Academic Chair for Carl Kreider

by John A. Lapp

For those of us at GC, June 3, 1978 represents a singularly historic occasion. In the more than 80 years of our College we have celebrated the achievements of numerous students and faculty. We have experienced the satisfaction of recognition for institutional achievements. We have enjoyed the support of a Church and community which have supplied our needs for capital and have underwritten the annual budget. But it is a special honor to name an endowed professorship for one of the genuinely great leaders of our institution. As one interested in the continuing well-being of Goshen College, I want to extend my gratitude to Howard and Myra Brembeck for their generosity. I hope this will be the first in a chain of endowed chairs which recognize faculty and administrative excellence and provide the financial undergirding so necessary for GC.

I want to focus these remarks on the appropriateness of naming a chair for Carl Kreider. Carl as he is known to some of us, Dean Kreider for many more, is not the kind of person who cultivates honors or public reputation. As a good Pennsylvania German, an old folk adage was bred into him that "self-praise stinks." Precisely because of his quiet dedication to higher education in the context of the Church, it is now appropriate to "praise a famous man."

There are three reasons why the first endowed chair at GC is appropriately named for Carl Kreider.

First, and most obvious, because of Carl Kreider's great contribution to the College. Carl has been at Goshen most of the time since he first came here as a student in 1932. Following graduation in 1936 and after attending Princeton University, the London School of Economics, and the Brookings Institution, he joined the faculty in 1940 as Instructor in Economics. From 1944 to 1970 he served as Dean of the College. On occasion he was Acting President and Provost.

As Professor of Economics Carl has taught a variety of courses, but it is his two-semester course in Principles that established his reputation on clarity of presentation, interest in contemporary developments, and emphasis that economics is not a "dismal science." Well known for high expectations of his students, Carl is equally known for his readiness to help unravel complex problems and work patiently with any student who needs special attention.

Carl's reputation for efficiency and fairness as an administrator reached far beyond campus boundaries. Faculty members knew that the course offering sheets would always be on time. The Curriculum and Instruction Committee expected well-thought-out statements on academic procedure. Administrative colleagues knew that for any problem they might face, Carl would have a sensible suggestion on how they might proceed. His work on the Liberal Arts Committee of the North Central Association of Colleges earned him respect as a "Dean's Dean" throughout the Midwest.

It would be appropriate to name a chair for Carl Kreider on the sole basis of his accomplishments as professor and administrator. Yet I think these successes are not the essence of Carl, for behind the professor and the administrator there is a husband and father who along with Evelyn raised a family of four. Indeed, for those of us in the know it is Carl and Evelyn as often as Carl alone. The two characteristics of Carl as a person that I want to emphasize apply equally to Evelyn and the family.

As much as he is a professor and an administrator, Carl is a churchman. Indeed, to teach and administer at GC implies this as part of one's occupation. Carl, however, has been unique. Throughout his years on the faculty he taught a Sunday School class nearly every Sunday. He served many years, as Evelyn does now, as a member of the CMC Board of Elders. He played pivotal roles in developing an appropriate congregational organization and only recently chaired the committee which developed the congregational covenant. He has served on a number of denominational committees and as the Chairman of the Mennonite Church General Board.

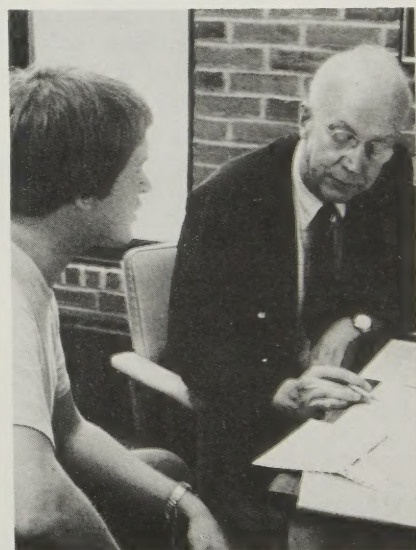

Through the years Carl has studied, traveled, and taught throughout the world. As the first Dean of International Christian University in Tokyo, Japan, as a Fulbright Lecturer at Haile Sellassie University in Ethiopia, as a member of the Overseas Committee of MBM, he has also demonstrated what it means to belong to the human race, the Family of Man, rather than any narrowly conceived ethnic or national group. He has dared to use his economist's insight to advise new businesses in the Paraguayan Chaco, his administrative skills in a humiliated postwar Japan. Carl is a dedicated churchman and global citizen: this is the second reason.

There is a third reason why the first chair at Goshen should be named for Carl Kreider. Carl is an economist. Though he has written a major work, The Anglo-American Trade Agreement (1943) and several encyclopedia articles, Carl is no ordinary social scientist.

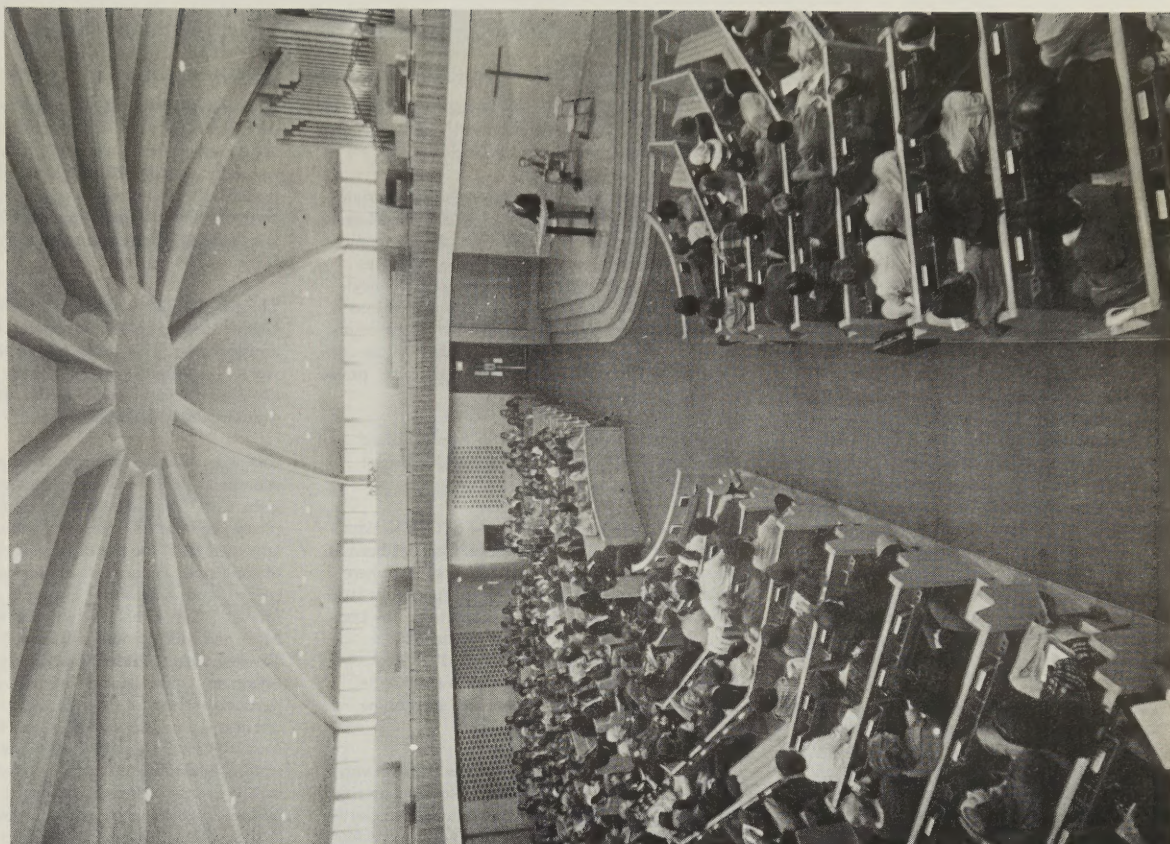

Carl is an educator economist. In an age in which economists tend to be either technicians or ideologists, Carl demonstrates that Edmund Burke's prophecy need not be true. Two centuries ago, Burke lamented that "the age of chivalry is gone. That of sophisters, economists and calculators has succeeded, and the glory of Europe is extinguished forever." Carl in his teaching and writing can cite Marx and Mill, quote his teacher Richard Henry Tawney, debate with Samuelson, Galbraith, and Friedman; yet he has not been identified with a particular school of thought. Several weeks ago I did hear Carl admit to being something of a free trader. Carl uses the method of the economists to stimulate learning and nurture wisdom. Economics for Carl is not narrowly construed in terms of a business method or strategy for development. Rather, economics is for the service of humankind, building a more wholesome society, alleviating the hurts of injustice and inequality.

This is why Carl Kreider brings to mind the father of the entire enterprise — Adam Smith. Smith, you will recall, was not labeled an economist in his own time. He was Professor of Moral Philosophy at the University of Glasgow. It was Smith's search for principles which could create a better way of life that led to the Wealth of Nations. For Smith as for Carl Kreider, economics was and is a moral search, a science with a conscience. In the classroom, in 15 years of monthly columns on current affairs, numerous book reviews, and other writings, Carl has methodically, patiently, and forthrightly taught that our economy should be organized as if people matter, that our economics do not exist for the sake of a system or strategy but for the sake of human well-being, that our economics cannot exist apart from moral values—especially those taught by the greatest of teachers and moral philosophers, Jesus of Nazareth. Carl Kreider is an educator economist with a conscience.

It is a great joy for me personally, a great honor for Goshen College, to recognize the investment of Howard and Myra Brembeck and perpetuate the achievement, vision, and ideals of Carl Kreider in this Chair in Economics.
